

The Belles-Lettres Series

SECTION III

THE ENGLISH DRAMA

FROM ITS BEGINNING TO THE PRESENT DAY

GENERAL EDITOR

GEORGE PIERCE BAKER, A.B.

PROFESSOR OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE

IN HARVARD UNIVERSITY

INAMORATO

This figure from the engraved title page of Robert Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy shows the image in the mind of the writer of these lines about John Ford:

“Deep in a dump John Ford alone was got
With folded armes and melancholy hat.”

'TIS PITY SHE'S A WHORE
AND
THE BROKEN HEART

BY JOHN FORD
"

EDITED BY
S. P. SHERMAN, PH.D.
PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH IN THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

BOSTON, U. S. A., AND LONDON
D. C. HEATH & CO., PUBLISHERS

PR 2524

T5 1915

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY D. C. HEATH & COMPANY

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

ID 5

~~$0.60~~

MAY -7 1915 T

© Cl. A 401058

no 1

Biography

JOHN FORD was baptized at Ilsington in Devonshire on April 17, 1586. He came of a respectable family which had long lived in this neighborhood. His father, Thomas Ford, it appears from Rymer's Fœdera (cited by Gifford) was in the commission of the peace. His mother was the sister of Lord-chief-justice Popham. "They in this county," says Fuller (Worthies, vol. 1, p. 413, 1840), "seem innated with a genius to study law . . . Devonshire makes a feast of such who by the practice thereof have raised great estates." Ford's relationship to Popham, a man of weight and influence in the reigns of both Elizabeth and James I, may be presumed to have affected his choice of a career. For though it is probable that he matriculated at Exeter College, Oxford, in March of 1601,¹ we find him entered in November, 1602, at the Middle Temple, of which Popham was a member and for some time treasurer. Ford's London life, even after he became a well-recognized dramatist, remained closely associated with the Inns-of-Court. In Gray's Inn he had a cousin John Ford, to whom he was deeply attached, and who doubtless opened the way to a pleasant fellowship with the members of his own house. In 1629 Ford dedicated his Lover's Melancholy "To my worthily respected friends, Nathaniel Finch, John Ford Esquires; Master Henry Blunt, Master Robert Ellice, and all the rest of the noble society of Gray's Inn." In 1633 he dedicated Love's Sacrifice "To my truest friend, my worthiest kinsman, John Ford, of Gray's Inn, Esq." Commendatory verses for this play were written by James Shirley, who in 1625 had taken up his residence at Gray's Inn.

In these days there was a powerful literary leaven in the Inns-of-Court. It is necessary only to mention the names of Bacon, Middleton, Beaumont, Sir John Davies, John Marston in order to suggest some of the forces that tended to divert young men from the severity of their legal studies — the father of Marston, who lamented his son's seduction by the stage, had vainly bequeathed to his heir his law books in the Middle Temple. The young barrister who passed from the study of jurisprudence to the study and profession of letters was supported by many distinguished precedents. Yet for nearly a score of years after his admission to the Temple, Ford seems merely to have dallied with literary composition. So late as 1629 in the prologue to the Lover's Melancholy he assumes an air of patrician superiority to those who make "the noble use of poetry a trade." Till after 1620 his work may well have been, as he is so fond of asserting that it was, the fruit of his leisure. His first literary venture, Fame's Memorial, 1606, is a long elegiac poem on the death of the Earl of Devonshire — a barely tolerable performance inspired by youthful enthusiasm and a desire to make himself known as a poet in polite society. Later in 1606 the visit of the King of Denmark in England gave occasion for his Honour Triumphant or the Peers' Challenge, a romantic treatise in prose and verse, to which was added The Monarchs' Meeting, containing three poetical pieces in honor of the Danish sovereign. This pamphlet, like Fame's Memorial, was designed to commend its author to the attention of aristocratic circles. His next production is a lost and unpublished comedy, An Ill Beginning has a Good End, acted at the Cockpit in 1613. Sir Thomas Overbury's Ghost, entered in the Stationers' Register on the 25th of November, 1615, is also merely a name. The last performance of this period is A Line of Life, a moral treatise in prose, published in 1620. The moral edification of the work is insignificant; but the style shows some interesting traces of Bacon's influence, and there are some suggestive sketches of contemporaries.

¹ A John Ford was entered under that date: see Dictionary of National Biography, article on Ford the dramatist.

After this long period of occasional, miscellaneous, and desultory writing, Ford entered upon a short period of industrious collaboration with Dekker, Rowley, Webster and perhaps others. It is a rather striking coincidence that in the year 1613, when Ford's first comedy (the lost An Ill Beginning has a Good End) was acted, Dekker was thrown into prison and was silent for seven years, and that Ford apparently made no further dramatic attempt till Dekker joined with him and Rowley in the composition of The Witch of Edmonton. This tragi-comedy was not published till 1658; but the execution of the witch referred to in the title took place in 1621; and it is generally agreed that the play was written to take immediate advantage of the interest aroused by the trial. In March, 1623-24, a moral masque, The Sun's Darling, was licensed for production at the Cock-pit; in 1636 it was printed with the names of Ford and Dekker on the title-page. In 1624 two other plays, The Fairy Knight and The Bristowe Merchant, were, according to Sir Henry Herbert's Diary, produced by the joint authorship of Ford and Dekker; but these are lost. In September of the same year a tragedy by Ford and Webster, A Late Murther of the Son upon the Mother, was licensed for the stage, but was not published, and is now lost. Further evidence of friendly relations between Ford and Webster is to be found in the commendatory verses by the former printed in the Duchess of Malfi, 1623.

The production of The Lover's Melancholy, November 24, 1628 (published 1629), marks the beginning of Ford's independent and significant dramatic period. In the dedicatory epistle he declares that this is the first dramatic piece of his "that ever courted reader," and he intimates that very likely he will not rush into print again. After a decent interval, however, he put forth in 1633 three tragedies, 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, The Broken Heart, and Love's Sacrifice. In 1634 he published his one historical play, The Chronicle History of Perkin Warbeck. The Fancies Chaste and Noble appeared in 1638, and in the following year The Lady's Trial, the last drama to be published during the author's life-time. A tragedy, Beauty in a Trance, was entered in the Stationers' Register, September 9, 1653, and two comedies, beside An Ill Beginning has a Good End, were entered in June, 1660, namely The London Merchant and The Royal Combat; all these were sacrificed by Warburton's cook. It remains only to add The Queen or the Excellency of her Sex, a tragi-comedy published in 1653 by Alexander Goughe, and attributed by Professor Bang in his reprint of 1906 to John Ford.

Of Ford's later days we know nothing; after 1639 he vanishes. Gifford says there was "an indistinct tradition among his neighbours that he married and had children." From various dedicatory epistles and complimentary verses we conclude that he lived on excellent terms with several gentlemen of the legal profession and several well-known playwrights — among the latter, Webster, Dekker, Shirley, Massinger, and Brome. He contributed verses prefixed to Barnabe

Barnes's Four Books of Offices, 1606; to several editions of Sir Thomas Overbury's Wife; and a highly laudatory poem on Ben Jonson to Jonsonus Virbius, 1638. Our knowledge of his character is mainly inferential, though his persistent emphasis upon his independence of the literary profession reveals clearly enough one of his points of pride. A line in Heywood's Hierarchy of the Blessed Angels, 1635,

And hee's now but Jocke Foord, that once was John perhaps indicates a certain loss of personal dignity which Ford suffered from his association with members of the dramatic profession. A couplet in The Time Poets (Choyce Drollery, 1656) throws some light upon his temperament :

Deep in a dump John Ford alone was got
With folded armes and melancholly hat.

From first to last Ford wrote to please selected judgments, and, though several of his plays seem to have met with tolerable approval, there is little evidence that he ever enjoyed wide reputation. Aside from the tributes of fellow dramatists, the most interesting contemporary mention that he received is the epigram of Richard Crashaw :

Thou cheat'st us, Ford; mak'st one seem two by art:
What is Love's Sacrifice but The Broken Heart?

Under the date March 3, 1668-69, Pepys writes in his Diary: "To the Duke of York's playhouse, and there saw an old play, the first time acted these forty years, called 'The Lady's Tryall,' acted only by the young people of the house; but the house very full." In 1714 Perkin Warbeck was reprinted to take advantage of the excitement caused by the Jacobite insurrection in Scotland, and in 1745 it was acted on similar occasion. In 1748 Macklin revived the Lover's Melancholy in Drury-Lane for the benefit of his wife. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore was included in Dodsley's Select Collection of Old Plays, 1744. The beginning of Ford's modern and substantial recognition, however, is marked by Lamb's panegyric on The Broken Heart in his Specimens from the Dramatic Poets, 1808.

Introduction

WHEN John Ford was a young man of twenty reading law at the inns-of-court he committed two trifling literary indiscretions called Fame's Memorial and Honour Triumphant. These little tracts, both published in 1606, are of slight intrinsic interest, and they have passed hitherto with insignificant comment. At first sight, indeed, there seems to be no important connection between them and their author's dramatic work which began to appear in print more than a score of years later. As a matter of fact, however, they yield to closer scrutiny extremely suggestive hints on the source of Ford's ideas and culture, on the native bias of his character, and on his peculiar conception of tragedy.

The immediate occasion of the first of these publications was the death, April 3, 1606, of the accomplished and valiant Lord Montjoy, Earl of Devonshire. Successor in Ireland to the ill-fated Essex, he had in the last years of Elizabeth's reign gained military and administrative glory. On December 26, 1605, he married Lady Rich, then divorced from her husband, and, as Gifford says, "by this one step, which, according to our notions and probably to his own, was calculated to repair in some measure the injury which the lady's character had sustained, ruined both her and himself. . . . While the Earl maintained an adulterous commerce with the lady all went smoothly; but the instant he married her, he lost the protection of the court and the estimation of the public. 'The King,' says Sanderson, 'was so much displeas'd thereat as it broke the Earl's heart; for his Majesty told him that he had purchased a fair woman with a black soul.' "

The situation evidently interested Ford greatly. As we shall have occasion to note elsewhere, he was always on the side of lovers. Love seemed to him first and last the supreme reality of life. In 1606 he was himself, according to Fame's Memorial, hopelessly in love, and so perhaps predisposed to sympathy. There was, moreover, much in the Devonshire case to enlist his interest. The Lady Rich had never loved Lord Rich, and had been married to him against her will. Between her and Devonshire, on the other hand, was the bond of a long and faithful affection. Rich was mean; brutal, and jealous. Devonshire was one of the first gentlemen of the time. Lady Rich under the name of "Stella" had been the muse of courtly poets from the days of Sidney. Ford enters the field with Fame's Memorial not merely to celebrate the character of the dead nobleman, but also to plead the rights of love against public opinion. His appeal is to the select few: non omnibus studeo, non malevolis. He refers to the Earl's alliance thus: "Link'd in the graceful bonds of dearest life, | Unjustly term'd disgraceful, he enjoy'd | Content's abundance." He characterizes the lady whom James had called a "fair woman with a black soul" as "that glorious star | Which beautified the value of our land, | The lights of whose perfections brighter are | Than all the lamps which in the lustre stand | Of Heaven's forehead." He commends her for braving popular censure: "A beauty fairly-wise, wisely-discreet | In winking mildly at the tongue of rumour." Finally he reveals the intensely romantic ground on which he stands by a veiled reference to this affair in Honour Triumphant: "They principally deserve love who can moderate their private affections, and level the scope of desert to the executing their ladies command, and adorn their names by martial feats of arms: . . . Yea, what better example than of late in our own territory? that noble, untimely-cropt spirit of honour, our English Hector [Devonshire], who cared not to undergo any gust of spleen and censure for his never-sufficiently admired Opia, a perfect Penelope [Penelope was the lady's given name] to her ancient knight Ulysses."

The circumstances which led to the composition of Honour Triumphant are worthy of a brief notice. In the summer of 1606 the King of Denmark paid a visit to the English court. In honour of the occasion there were endless banquets, parades, pageants, plays, and royal joustings. Among the martial pastimes one interesting revival from bygone days of chivalry demands our attention, namely, a "Challenge of four Knights Errant of the Fortunate Islands, (Earls of Lenox, Arundel, Pembroke, and Montgomery,) to maintain four propositions relating to love and ladies, addressed to all honourable 'Men at Arms, Knights Adventurers of Hereditary Note, that for most maintainable actions wield the sword or lance, in the quest of glory.'" This entry may be found in the Calendar of State Papers

Domestic, vol. xxii, June 1, page 319. To the notice is added in brackets, "By Wm. Drummond of Hawthornden." It is not clear what is meant by this ascription. In 1606 Drummond was making his first visit to London, and since his father was in attendance upon the King, would naturally have been in touch with the affairs of the court. In a letter dated at Greenwich, June 1, 1606 (see Drummond's Works, Edinburgh, 1711, pp. 231-32), Drummond gives the full text of the challenge, and names the four defenders. His wording of the four propositions, slightly different from Ford's, is as follows:

"1. That in service of ladies no knight hath free will.

"2. That it is beauty maintaineth the world in valor.

"3. That no fair lady was ever false.

"4. That none can be perfectly wise but lovers."

Drummond adds: "The king of Denmark is expected here daily, for whose entertainment, this challenge appeareth to be given forth"; this does not seem to indicate Drummond's authorship. In a letter of June 28 (Works as above, p. 233), Drummond records a humorous answer to the challenge with four counter propositions; but he remarks that "the answerers have not appeared."

The affair made the king laugh, says the Scotch poet, but the young Templar Ford was struck by the happy thought that the pen is mightier than the sword. Accordingly he brings forth his pamphlet Honour Triumphant: or the Peeres' Challenge with this motto on the title-page: Tam Mercurio, quam Marti — "In honor of all faire ladies, and in defence of these foure positions following: 1. Knights in ladies service have no free-will. 2. Beauty is the maintainer of valour. 3. Faire lady was never false. 4. Perfect lovers are onely wise. Maintained by Arguments.” The four parts of the discourse are addressed to the Lords Lennox, Arundel, Pembroke, and Montgomery in the order named. The dedicatory epistle is addressed to the Countess of Pembroke and the Countess of Montgomery. There is also a saucy address “to every sundry-opinioned reader” which contains the assurance that Ford is writing to please the fair and noble, and is utterly indifferent to the judgment of all others.

But what chiefly concerns us is the spirit and temper of the document itself. We should not expect much originality of thought in a youth of twenty, nor do we find it here. Honour Triumphant reveals a mind immersed in the chivalric romances and poetry of the Elizabethan reign,¹ and deeply impregnated with the Platonic ideas of love and beauty best represented in the hymns of Spenser but through the medium of Italian literature widely disseminated in English. The upshot of the argument is to identify the good with the beautiful and the service of a fair lady with the pursuit of virtue. “The chiefest creation of man,” says Ford, “was — next his own soul — to do homage to the excellent frame of beauty — a woman!” “To be captived to beauty is to be free to virtue.” To be excluded from the favour of beauty is a “hell insufferable.” All men of valour aim at honour; but, he contends, “the mark which honour directs his level to is to participate the delightful sweets of sweetest beauty." Beauty alone is a good in itself. "For men to be honoured of ladies is the scope of all felicity." This position is supported by Aristotle who says: "the temperature of the mind follows the temperature of the body." Hence it follows that if a lady is beautiful she must be good: "as the outward shape is more singular, so the inward virtues must be more exquisite." To love a beautiful woman is the highest wisdom. Indeed, lovers are often superior to theologians in their knowledge of the divine; for theologians are occasionally distracted by human affairs; but "lovers have evermore the idea of beauty in their imaginations, and therefore hourly do adore their Maker's architecture." In conclusion: "Would any be happy, courageous, singular, or provident? let him be a lover. In that life consisteth all happiness, all courage, all glory, all wisdom."

¹ The influence of Lyly's Euphues is obvious.

The ardor and earnestness of Ford's style suggest that the leading propositions of this pamphlet were to him not merely a set of pretty paradoxes, but a religion. The worship of beauty, the fatality of love, the glorification of passion—these were the fruits of an aristocratic and highly captivating mode of free thought, independent alike of public opinion, common morals, laws, and religion, and at times even clashing sharply with them. For it is clear that most startlingly unconventional conclusions may be logically derived from the fundamental principles of the religion of beauty. To take a single instance, Spenser says in his "Hymne in Honour of Beautie" that love is a celestial harmony of hearts

“composed of starres concent,” of hearts that knew each other before they descended from their “heavenly bowres.”

Then wrong it were that any other twaine
Should in love's gentle band combyned bee
But those whom heaven did at first ordaine,
And made out of one mould the more t'agree.

Suppose, for the sake of illustration, a common Elizabethan marriage, such as that of Lord and Lady Rich, in which relatives dispose of the bride for reasons of fortune and family. Subsequently the man destined by heaven for Lady Rich appears. According to the religion of beauty, it is right that they should be united; but the corrupted currents of law, morality, and church religion do not allow it.

Spenser's wish to withdraw this poem from circulation because of its dangerous implications — finding that young readers “do rather sucke out poyson to their strong passion, then hony to their honest delight”¹ — is a characteristic example of English ethical sense curbing the æsthetic impulse in the interest of conduct. In England this religion of beauty was then, as it has always been, an exotic;² and graver heads in Ford's own time repudiated it in no mild terms, betraying their conviction that the glorification of amorous passion was a curse out of Italy, a weakness to be condoned in youth, a vice to

¹ See his prefatory note to the edition of 1596.

² Cf. Camilla to Philautus: “In Italy to lyve in love is thought no fault, for that there they are all given to lust, which maketh thee to conjecture that we in England reckon love as ye chiefest vertue, which we abhorre as ye greatest vice.” Euphues, p. 373, London, 1900.

be condemned in maturity. "The stage," says Lord Bacon, "is more beholden to love than the life of man. For as to the stage love is ever a matter of comedies and now and then of tragedies, but in life it doth much mischief, sometimes like a siren, sometimes like a fury. . . . Great spirits and great business do keep out this weak passion." ¹ Equally striking is the judgment on love by that little known but very interesting essayist Sir William Cornwallis: "It is a pretty soft thing this same Love . . . the badge of eighteene, and upward, not to be disallowed; better spend thy time so then at Dice. I am content to call this Love, though I holde Love too worthy a Cement to joyne earth to earth." So far is Cornwallis from partaking in the pseudo-Platonic ideas of Ford that he is unwilling to bestow the name of love at all on the "affection" existing between the sexes, "for it gives opportunity to lust, which the pureness of Love will not endure." ² As further evidence of a contemporary distrust of human nature and disgust at all irregular relations, take these sentences from an excellent "Discourse of Laws" ³ which appeared in 1620: "Laws are so absolutely necessary . . . to make such a distinction between lawful and exorbitant desires, as unlawfull affections may not be colored with good appearances. . . . Whereas men be naturally affected and possessed with a violent heat of desires and passions and fancies, laws restrain and draw them from those actions and thoughts that would precipitate to all manner of hazards and ill, which natural inclination is prone enough to." Finally, Robert Burton after ranging widely through the vast literature of the subject defines romantic love as a disease. "The comeliness and beauty which proceeds from woman," he says, "causeth Heroical, or Love-melancholy, is more eminent above the rest, and properly called Love. The part affected in men is the liver, and therefore called Heroical, because commonly Gallants, Noblemen, and the most generous spirits are possessed with it."¹ Yet this heroic love, he declares, "deserves much rather to be called burning lust than by such an honourable title."² It is the special passion of an idle nobility: "We may conclude, that if they be young, fortunate, rich, high-fed, and idle withal, it is almost impossible that they should live honest, not rage and precipitate themselves into those inconveniences of burning lust."³

¹ See his essay "Of Love."

² Essays. By Sir William Cornewallys, London, 1606: Essay 5.

³ An essay in Horæ Subsecivæ, London, 1620.

Now it is a significant fact that one of the few bits of contemporary evidence bearing on Ford's character tends to show that he had the reputation of a romantic amorist. In Choyce Drollery (1656) there appear two lines with distinct implications:

Deep in a dump John Ford alone was got
With folded armes and melancholly hat.⁴

Ellis seems to think that this means that he was of "shy and reserved temperament." Ward glosses thus: "He

¹ The Anatomy of Melancholy, vol. III, p. 43, London, 1904.

² Ibid., p. 57.

³ Ibid., p. 69.

⁴ Choyce Drollery. . . . Now first reprinted from the edition of 1656. . . . Ed. by J. Woodfall Ebsworth, Boston, 1876: the reference is in a poem On the Time-Poets, pp. 5-7.

is ridiculed for a tendency to self-seclusion and melancholy." But the best commentary upon the couplet is furnished by one of the curious sections of the frontispiece of Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy. It represents a tall, elegantly attired young gentleman standing with folded hands and wide hat pulled far down over his eyes. Beside him are books and quill pen, at his feet music and a lute, and he is labeled "Inamorato." He illustrates the section of the work called "Love Melancholy." The couplet, then, does not furnish us perhaps "that vivid touch of portraiture" which Ellis sees in it, but it refers Ford by a conventional sign to a well recognized type. This interpretation is borne out by a passage in Cornwallis; love, he says, brings forth "songs full of passion, enough to procure crossed arms, and the Hat pulled down."¹ I dwell upon this point because it goes to prove, with the other evidence, that Ford portrayed the various passions of love in his dramas from an inside view, and not with the detachment of the sovereign dramatist nor the objectivity of a scholar or a physician, but with the brooding sympathy of a lover.

It is especially necessary to insist upon this point, furthermore, because Ford, in spite of his fundamentally different point of view, shows a large obligation to Burton. With the single exception of Perkin Warbeck, he chooses for the theme of his plays some aspect of romantic or "heroical" love, and he scrutinizes the mental and physical symptoms of the lovers with something of medical interest. Like Burton, he seems to believe this heroic love the peculiar affection of men and women living in luxurious idleness; for he excludes his characters from participation in field sports, war, adventure, and shuts them up where love is the only social resource — to quote Burton's own words, "in great houses, princes' courts, where they are idle in summo gradu, fare well, live at ease, and cannot tell otherwise how to spend their time." His characters, accordingly, being vacant of all other occupation, are completely engrossed by a single passion of love, or of jealousy, or of revenge, or of grief, which becomes sole master of their fate, and ravishes them with extravagant joy, or secretly preys upon their spirits, or hurries them swiftly down to crime and death.

¹ Essay 5.

In his first published play, The Lover's Melancholy (1629), Ford acknowledges by a marginal note his indebtedness to Burton for a passage distinguishing certain mental diseases from melancholy. It has also been pointed out that the interlude of madmen is derived from the Anatomy. It should be made equally clear that the germinal idea of the whole play is due to Burton. The Lover's Melancholy is decidedly deficient in action, but such elements of plot as it possesses seem to have been suggested by Burton's procedure in the section of his work treating of love melancholy. Ford chooses for this scene a love-sick court, and in a medico-poetical fashion studies the causes, the symptoms and the cure of love. He even introduces as an active figure among the dramatis personæ a physician who has evidently given his days and nights to the study of Burton. In this case the patients are all afflicted with love-sorrow caused by a separation from the objects of their affections. Since their affections flow in permissible channels the cure is simple; it is necessary only to re-unite the sundered lovers.

Closely related to The Lover's Melancholy by virtue of their common relation to the Anatomy of Melancholy is the play called The Queen (1653), recently edited by Professor Bang and most plausibly attributed by him to the authorship of Ford. Here again, with something more of plot than in The Lover's Melancholy, we find the same curious use of the Burtonian psychotherapeutics. Alphonso, the hero, is suffering from an unaccountable but intense antagonism to the entire female sex. The queen is suffering equally from a no less intense and unaccountable passion for Alphonso. Muretto, a benevolent villain who understands the nature of this heroic melancholy, deliberately goes about, like a modern practitioner of the art of mental healing, to suggest to the mind of the hero thoughts favorable to the queen. By a strenuous course of psychological treatment he restores the woman-hater to a normal condition. Hero and heroine are manipulated by the master of the show in certain typical and exciting crises of love, jealousy, and remorse to illustrate the treatment of mental aberration. The formula is apparent: Alphonso is the patient; Muretto is the physician; the queen is the cure.

The Fancies Chaste and Noble (1638) is doubtless from the dramatic, the æsthetic, or the ethical point of view one of the worst plays in the world. It admits the reader to a disgustingly indecent situation, extracts from it the full measure of repulsiveness, and then in the fifth act blandly assures us it was all an innocent hoax. The thing is bad beyond condemnation, but perhaps not beyond explanation. One may assume that it was a work of Ford's dotage. Or — and it is rather tempting — one may assume that Ford had undertaken, like his master Burton, to display not only all the common aspects of love-melancholy, but also its sinister and execrable idiosyncrasies, of which senile lasciviousness is one.

The Lady's Trial (1639), the last of the plays with happy endings, may be considered a study of groundless jealousy after marriage. The husband returning from a long journey becomes gravely suspicious of his entirely innocent wife. All the friends and acquaintances of the family rise vehemently in defense of the wife, and at length the jealous man's ill fancies are routed. The interest here lies in the delicate portrayal of the emotions of a finely fibred woman under stress of a terrible accusation, in the chivalrous feeling which her virtue excites in the breast of the least virtuous, and in the careful exposition of the various shades of feeling through which the husband passes before his confidence is restored. The play contains some of Ford's sweetest blank verse and some excellently subtle bits of characterization; but the substance of the story is altogether too slight to be stretched over a five-act drama.

If Ford had written only The Lover's Melancholy, The Queen, The Fancies Chaste and Noble, and The Lady's Trial he would have established but small claims on the attention of posterity. Nor would Perkin Warbeck have made him a reputation. Coming to the stage after Shakespeare, Chapman, Jonson, Dekker, Heywood, Middleton, Webster, Beaumont, and Fletcher, he had nothing to contribute to dramatic technique but much to learn. On the basis of the five plays so far considered one might almost be justified in rating him as an intermittently successful imitator. The Lover's Melancholy is a pretty thing in the Arcadian mood, but immeasurably surpassed in its kind by predecessors. As for The Queen, Beaumont and Fletcher had written a half dozen tragi-comedies of its type as good or far better. No one who had seen Volpone would have endured sitting through The Fancies.¹ The old playgoer might fairly have regarded The Lady's Trial as a tame, uneventful, somewhat modernized version of The Winter's Tale. Perkin Warbeck is a carefully constructed, well written, and highly respectable specimen of the English historical play. Produced at a date long after the vogue of the chronicle play had died away, it has attracted attention by its solitariness and has been highly praised. Placed beside Edward II, Richard III, Henry IV or Henry V it looks distinctly anæmic. Our dramatist, on the strength of this evidence, seems to lack ideas.² He catches a glimpse of an interesting dramatic situation, but he lacks the imagination to follow out its evolution.

¹ Many situations in the two plays are parallel, and the supposed character of Octavio has something in common with that of Volpone.

² The amount of credit that Ford should receive for The Sun's Darling and The Witch of Edmonton is still disputable and, like most problems in collaboration, probably always will be. Since space does not permit of any profitable discussion of them here, I prefer to pass them with a reference to F. F. Pierce's two articles on the collaboration of Dekker and Ford in Anglia, xxxvi (1912).

He has a certain penetrating insight into the passionate moods of the spirit, but he lacks the power of inventing characteristic action for the display of those moods. Frequently he sets to work in a very mechanical fashion to contrive a story to fit his characters, and, being a feeble plotter, too often contents himself with presenting the persons of the main plot in a flimsy patchwork of scenes pieced out to the length of a play by an irrelevant and tedious sub-plot. By common consent it has been decided that wit and humour were omitted from his endowment, and that his comic characters are among the worst in the history of the English drama.

Upon what, then, does Ford's reputation rest? Indubitably upon his three tragedies, 'Tis Pity, The Broken Heart, and Love's Sacrifice, all published in 1633. Like many another man of distinct but strictly limited genius, Ford had two or three original ideas in him, uttered them with power, and then in a vain effort to repeat his success pattered on from bad to worse. The fact seems to be that his genius remained somewhat lethargic unless his heart was engaged. It is highly significant that in these three really noteworthy plays his theme is forbidden love. In each case he confronts what he regards as an essentially tragic problem; and his constructive power, his characterization, and his poetry rise to the occasion. In each case he approaches his material with certain romantic preconceptions which give to his treatment of illicit passion an impressive consistency. He appears to believe still, as in his youth, that love between the sexes is of mystical and divine origin, that it is irresistible, and that it is the highest good, the end and aim of being. This certainly is the creed of his tragic characters. They believe in it uncompromisingly; for it they are ready to die, reiterating their faith in the last disgrace and agony. In discussing the peculiar tragic effects which issue from this romantic creed I shall disregard the conjectural dates of the plays, and take them up in a kind of climactic order. This procedure is warranted by the facts, first, that the dates of composition appear to be indeterminable, and, second, that the dates of composition do not affect the present discussion.

The Broken Heart presents a clearly defined moral problem. Penthea, very much in love with Orgilus and betrothed to him, is forced to marry Bassanes. Orgilus, taking a purely rationalistic or idealistic view of the matter, refuses to acknowledge any validity in the union of Penthea and Bassanes. Frantic with indignant passion he cries:

I would possess my wife; the equity
Of very reason bids me.

Penthea with a supreme effort preserves self-control, and urges her desperate lover to resign himself to the irrevocable, pleading that the true quality of their mutual affection will best show itself in virtuous submission to necessity. Which of the two is right? In Elizabethan times when parents disposed of their children in a rather more highhanded fashion than now obtains — when Penelope Devereux was carried protesting to the altar to marry Lord Rich — was it not a fair question?

By a subtlety in feminine characterization unsurpassed if not unequalled in the period Ford reveals the full tragic meaning of the problem. Penthea's conduct in this difficult crisis is beyond criticism. She shows tenderness to her lover without tempting his weakness. She admits that they have been grievously wronged, but she will not consent to his righting that wrong by another. Under the burden of her own sorrow she finds strength to comfort his. Yet she is intensely human even at the height of an almost saintly renunciation; though she has the rare charity to wish him happy with another wife, she feels a sensitive solicitude for that wife's opinion of her. When she has finally been forced to send her lover away with sharp words, she is torn by the conflict of love and honor, and is dissolved in pity for the suffering of the unhappy man. Having resolved, come what may, to respect the ceremonial bond, she must fight for honor in a long and silent inner struggle in which victory is attended with no less misery than defeat. For she is held in a living death by her relations with Bassanes, her husband. The situation has been a favorite on the modern stage. She is impaled on the horns of a dilemma — dishonor in the arms of Orgilus, dishonor in the arms of Bassanes. Because she is a woman and the weight of convention is heavy upon her, she chooses the legitimized rather than the unlegitimized shame. Yet at last her revolted spirit bursts into speech; and she begs her brother Ithocles, who was instrumental in her marriage, to kill her. "How does thy lord esteem thee?" asks the now remorseful brother. Penthea's reply approaches the unbearable:

Such an one
As only you have made me; a faith breaker,

A spotted whore; forgive me, I am one,
In act, not in desires, the gods must witness.

For she that's wife to Orgilus, and lives
In known adultery with Bassanes
Is at the best a whore. Wilt kill me now?

This tremendous sense of involuntary pollution in a woman legally blameless and in the vulgar sense perfectly respectable is a new note in the drama and an important one.

Pentheia's high-strung soul cannot for long endure the strain. Her mind begins to break down under the omnipresent horror of her unclassified sin. Stroke by stroke Ford makes it appear more and more dubious whether she has chosen the better part. With wits wandering on the verge of final dissolution she turns in the last gasp of her strangled emotion to the well-beloved Orgilus, murmuring of bride's laces and gathered roses. Over all still broods the undying horror; from the depths of pure pathos, from the ultimate bitterness of a ruined life comes her cry:

Since I was first a wife, I might have been Mother to many pretty smiling babes;
They would have smiled when I smiled, and for certain
I should have cried when they cried; truly, brother,
My father would have picked me out a husband,
And then my little ones had been no bastards;
But 'tis too late for me to marry now,
I am past child-bearing.

Such a revelation of complex tragic emotion in the soul of a pure woman cannot be found elsewhere in the old drama, even in Shakespeare — perhaps I should say, least of all in Shakespeare. I wish here to accent the words "complex" and "pure." Desdemona, for example, is pure; but her tragic emotion is simple. The tragic emotion of Cleopatra, on the other hand, may be described as complex; but she cannot be described as pure. And in general the tragic heroines of the period range themselves under one banner or the other: under Desdemona's, Aspatia in the Maid's Tragedy, the Duchess of Malfi, and Dorothea in the Virgin Martyr; under Cleopatra's, Tamyra in Bussy D'Ambois, Evadne in the Maid's Tragedy, Vittoria in the White Devil, and Beatrice-Joanna in the Changeling. There is perhaps a third class of those who, like Mrs. Frankford in the Woman Killed with Kindness, are neither pure nor emotionally complex — weak sisters who are perfectly conventional even in their sins. The orthodox and unadventurous ethics of the majority of the Elizabethan dramatists are seen in nothing more distinctly than in the fact that they keep their pure women out of moral dilemmas. In their representation of life the world may break the hearts of the innocent, but only the wicked, it seems, may break their own hearts. The tragic emotions of the pure are simple, because their disaster comes upon them from without; the tragic emotions of the guilty are complex, because their disaster is due to a discord in their own souls. In The Broken Heart Ford throws down the gauntlet to orthodox morality by placing a thoroughly pure woman in a genuine moral dilemma. This is his most notable innovation. By establishing the tragic conflict of Penthea in her own spirit, he makes of her a distinctly modern type of heroine. In a mood of high and poignant seriousness he shows that keeping the laws and statutes may sometimes make against virtue, and the preservation of honor be the wreck of peace.

Before leaving this play we must give a word to the eminently Fordian but far less complex character of Orgilus. Convinced that Penthea's resolution will never be moved, he fixes all his thoughts on revenge, and, in a kind of icy ardor or madness, murders Ithocles; for which he is sentenced to death with the approval of those surviving in the last act. It is to be noted, however, that he welcomes death, dies bravely, and absolutely unrepentant. The man is really depicted as a martyr to the strength and fidelity of his passion; he is an uncompromising idealist. The laws against murder must be recognized; but by emphasizing the outrage which Orgilus has suffered, the vehemence of passion by which he is consumed, and the stoical calm with which he meets his fate, Ford has made him appear rather a victim than a monster. The death of Penthea, the murder of Ithocles, the execution of Bassanes, and the death of Calantha all prove how fatal it is to offer resistance to omnipotent love.

Love's Sacrifice, which treats of a more advanced degree of forbidden love than The Broken Heart, arouses in the reader a mingled feeling of admiration and disgust. It is not so evenly and carefully composed as The Broken Heart. It admits unenlivening comic scenes and an extensive and repulsive sub-plot. It employs prose freely, whereas The Broken Heart is entirely in verse. Finally its moral issues are very badly defined, and it ends weakly in dense moral confusion. On the other hand, the plot of Love's Sacrifice is a more modern conception. The principal characters are drawn with a bolder and more energetic stroke. The atmosphere has a warmth and color not found in the Spartan play. And in the two or three best scenes there is a sheer dramatic intensity unsurpassed elsewhere in Ford's work.

Love's Sacrifice is distinctly modern in conception, for it deals seriously with "elective affinities" after marriage. The Duke of Caraffa loves and marries Bianca, a respectable woman of inferior rank, who respects her husband's position and virtues but feels no great affection for him. Then appears Fernando, young, handsome, captivating, the third person of what we have learned to call the "inevitable triangle." He conceives a violent passion for Bianca, which, as often as he declares, she virtuously repulses. But these oft-repeated protestations of love, though they do not at once conquer her will, insidiously take possession of her heart. The critical turn in the unequal duel is subtly conceived. In a moment of unusual temptation Fernando renews his fiery pleading, and once more Bianca with greater vehemence and asperity than ever spurns him from her. The impetuous lover is at last touched in his better self by her constancy, and begs forgiveness; which being granted, they bid each other good-night.

But alas for the perverse reactions of the human spirit! Bianca's virtue has cooled Fernando's passion; but Bianca's passion is kindled by Fernando's virtue. While he assailed her, she stood on her guard; when he desists from his attack, her defenses fall. Distraught with stifled emotions, she steals into Fernando's chamber, clad only in her night mantle, and finds him sleeping. His quick forgetfulness bewilders her. She wakes him, and, as if frenzied by some demoniac power, lays bare her soul in an agony of confession, in shame and in sorrow:

Howe'er my tongue
Did often chide thy love, each word thou spak'st
Was music to my ear; was never poor,
Poor wretched woman liv'd that lov'd like me,
So truly, so unfeignedly.

I vow'd a vow to live a constant wife :
I have done so ; nor was there in the world
A man created could have broke that truth
For all the glories of the earth but thou,
But thou, Fernando ! Do I love thee now ?

Fernando, amazed by her abandonment to a passion so much more imperious than his own, can only gasp, "Beyond imagination!" She hurries breathlessly on:

True, I do,
Beyond imagination: if no pledge
Of love can instance what I speak is true
But loss of my best joys, here, here, Fernando,
Be satisfied, and ruin me.

Again Fernando is so stunned that she has to make very clear what she means. But on the heels of surrender she cries:

Mark me now,
If thou dost spoil me of this robe of shame,
By my best comforts, here I vow again,
To thee, to heaven, to the world, to time,
Ere yet the morning shall new-christen day,
I'll kill myself !

Say what we will of the character of this woman — and there is little question what we shall have to say — here is the very whirlwind of conflicting emotions. It is doubtless a situation which should never be shown upon the stage; but it is wonderfully realized. It is morbid; but it is terrific — this love which must express its uttermost, though the cost be death. Beside the tragic tempest in the body and soul of the woman, Fernando's ardor seems but a little warmth of the blood. He shrinks before the storm he has raised, and, scarcely more from consideration than from terror, he refuses her sacrifice. The momentous meeting ends with mutual vows of love which is to keep on the hither side of criminal realization.

Up to this point the main story is conducted with great strength and skill. The characters are clearly conceived and consistently portrayed. The action is clean and swift, with telling interplay of opposed wills strained in the crisis to the breaking point on the brink of disastrous decision. But after the supremely dramatic midnight meeting Bianca and Fernando begin to lose their bearings, and unhappily Ford seems to lose his bearings, too. The lovers grow less and less Platonic; their pledges prove poor shifts with the devil. In the fifth act they are indulging in dangerous speculations. Bianca speaks:

Why shouldst thou not be mine? Why should the laws,
The iron laws of ceremony, bar
Mutual embraces? What's a vow? a vow?
Can there be sin in unity?

.

I had rather change my life
 With any waiting-woman in the land
 To purchase one night's rest with thee, Fernando,
 Than be Caraffa's spouse a thousand years.

The duke interrupts their embraces with drawn sword. Instead of showing fear or imploring pardon, Bianca turns hussy, flaunts her love for Fernando, and courts death, although at the same time she declares that she is innocent. Goaded at length to fury, the duke gives her a mortal wound. Bianca dies with these extraordinary words on her lips:

Live to repent too late. Commend my love
 To thy true friend, my love to him that owes it;
 My tragedy to thee; my heart to — to — Fernando.

And so the tragic heroine passes away without a thought of repentance, without a shadow of suspicion that she has anything of which to repent. Indeed she accepts her martyrdom, confident of her innocence as a very Desdemona. Her great love for Fernando she wears as a crown of glory. Yet, it is sufficiently plain, though she has abstained from the sin of the flesh, that her mind is as spotted with adultery as the merest strumpet's.

Moreover, from this scene to the end of the play it is indubitable that Ford takes precisely Bianca's position — that he wishes to leave the impression that she is a perfectly irreproachable woman. He makes Fernando assure the duke's counsellors that "a better woman never blessed the earth." They agree, and take his side against the "jealous madman," her husband. At the point of death Fernando assures the duke that the world's wealth could not redeem the loss of "such a spotless wife." The duke agrees, and repents of his "hellish rage," declaring that "so chaste, so dear a wife" no man ever enjoyed. His faithful secretary, who first awakened his suspicions, is to be hanged on the prison top as a damned villain till he starve to death. He looks upon himself—so do the rest—as a rash murderer. In remorse he commits suicide, having first given orders that he be buried in one tomb with his chaste wife and his "unequaled friend," Fernando! And in his last breath he hopes that his fate will be a warning to jealous husbands.

Now the conclusion of this play must seem to every person of normal sense singularly wrong, weak, and futile. In the beginning of it every one knows what is decent; in the middle Fernando and Bianca grow skeptical as to what is decent; in the end no one knows what is decent—not even the author. That is the impression Love's Sacrifice makes upon the modern reader. Nevertheless, Ford would doubtless have denied that there had been any moral vacillation on his part; and, indeed, it is not difficult to show that he has treated his theme in perfect consistency with his romantic convictions. Love, as he had declared in Honour Triumphant, he regarded as the supreme good in life and as the irresistible master of the destinies of those whom it has joined together. Bianca and Fernando, therefore, in loving each other even unto death are not only fulfilling their inevitable destinies, but are also pursuing their supreme good. Of course, Ford might say, it was unfortunate that they did not meet before Bianca was married. That was their fatal misfortune; that was their tragedy. Yet on the whole how nobly they conducted themselves under the stress of adverse circumstances. They recognized the general force of the matrimonial bond, and they withheld from their love its natural sustenance in order not to violate that bond. As for refraining from love itself, that were as impossible as drawing the stars from their courses. Even the jealous husband, then, must confess that they conformed to the limit of their power with the conventions of this somewhat helter skelter world. In some such fashion as this Ford himself must have justified the work.

'Tis Pity is extremely interesting both as a play and as a psychological document; for it represents the height of Ford's achievement as a dramatist and the depth of his corruption as an apostle of passion. The utterances of critics upon it from the seventeenth century to the present day emphasize the necessity of a divided judgment. Langbaine declared "that it equals any of our author's plays; and were to be commended, did not the author paint the incestuous love between Giovanni and his sister Annabella in too beautiful colours." Lamb pointed out that "even in the poor perverted reason of Giovanni and Annabella, we discover traces of that fiery particle, which in the irregular starting from out of the road of beaten action, discovers something of a right line even in obliquity, and shows hints of an improvable greatness in the lowest descents and degradations of our nature." Gifford substantially reiterated the sentiments of Langbaine: "It [the poetry] is in truth too seductive for the subject, and flings a soft and soothing light over what in its natural state would glare with salutary and repulsive horror." Fleay is even more biting; he says: "Well allowed of, when acted, by the Earl of Peterborough to whom he dedicated it. So it is now by some critics and publishers . . . but not by any well regulated mind." In connection with Fleay's, the comment of Ellis is striking: "In 'Tis Pity," says Ellis, "Ford touched the highest point that he ever reached. He never succeeded in presenting an image so simple, passionate, and complete, so free comparatively from mixture of weak or base elements as that of the boy and girl lovers who were brother and sister. The tragic story is unrolled from first to last with fine truth and clear perceptions." Ward says, "The poison of this poetic treatment of mortal sin is dissolved in a cup of sweetness." Schelling finds in it "consummate poetic art . . . a strange and unnatural originality like a gorgeous and scented but poisonous exotic of the jungle."

Of all these criticisms Lamb's seems to me the most penetrating and the most illuminating. Speaking in his poetical Brunonian fashion of "that fiery particle" and the "something of a right line even in obliquity" he touches upon the intense romantic idealism which marks all Ford's lovers, and which is the fundamental and controlling spirit in all Ford's most characteristic work. It will not do to attribute his amazing attempt to excite sympathy for the depraved hero and heroine to the general spirit of the time; the unnatural passion which is the theme of his play was quite as abhorrent to common feelings in the age of Charles I. as it is today.

Indeed, there is some evidence that it was even more abhorrent. In the Calendar of State Papers for 1631, two years before the publication of 'Tis Pity, is recorded under the date of May 12 a "sentence of the ecclesiastical commissioners upon Sir Giles Allington for intermarrying with Dorothy Dalton, daughter of Michael Dalton and his wife, which latter was half-sister to Sir Giles." A few days later the Rev. Joseph Mead writing to Sir Martin Stuteville dwells upon the impressiveness of the trial at which eight bishops presided, and upon the heavy penalties imposed, which included a fine of £2000 upon the procurer of the license. In conclusion Mead writes: "It was the solemnest, the gravest and the severest censure that ever, they say, was made in that court."¹

It is possible that this case, doubtless the talk of London, may have suggested to Ford the composition of 'Tis Pity. It was exactly the situation to appeal to his sympathies as a poet and to his interest as a lawyer. Here again, as in the Devonshire-Rich affair, the impulses of the heart were in conflict with the world's laws as defined by the ecclesiastical court. The Bishop of London had pronounced Sir Giles Allington's marriage a most heinous crime. But Ford did not look to bishops for his moral judgments; his court of last appeal was the small circle of those unfettered spirits who recognized a kind of higher morality in obedience to the heart. It would at any rate have accorded with his temper and his previous work to write a play presenting a case of incest much more flagrant than that before the public yet so veiled with poetical glamour as to elicit for the criminals both pity and admiration. That, at least, is what he did.

¹ Court and Times of Charles I., vol. II, p. 119.

He approaches the theme not with the temper of a stern realist bent on laying bare the secret links of cause and effect in a ferocious and ugly story of almost unmentionable lust and crime, but with the temper of a decadent romanticist bent on showing the enthralling power of physical beauty and the transfiguring power of passion. He accordingly makes the ill-starred Giovanni and Annabella the well-bred offspring of a prosperous gentleman of Parma. The young man has had every opportunity of religious training, study at the university, and intercourse with good society. The girl, brought up carefully in her father's house, is endowed with every grace of mind and body, and is flattered by the attention of distinguished suitors.

But like their author they have been nourished on that great mass of Renaissance literature which in Italy and in England establishes the religion and theology of earthly love. In the opening scene Giovanni, already in the throes of passion, fortifies himself with philosophical authority, casuistical argument, and Platonic nonsense quite in the vein of Spenser's hymns. Shocking as it is, we must recognize that this blossomed corruption is rooted in the fair garden of Elizabethan romance. To Giovanni, as to the youthful Spenser, love is the supreme thing in the world, beauty the unquestioned object of adoration. Since he finds this adorable beauty in his sister, his soul conforming to its celestial nature must bow and worship. Duty in its ordinary sense is not in this field at all; the soul's duty is complete submission to the divinity of beauty —

Must I not praise
That beauty which, if fram'd anew, the gods
Would make a god of, if they had it there,
And kneel to it, as I do kneel to them ?

This note is struck again and again; thus in complaint:

The love of thee, my sister, and the view
Of thy immortal beauty have untun'd
All harmony both of my rest and life.

Thus argumentatively:

Wise nature first in your creation meant
To make you mine, else't had been sin and foul
To share one beauty to a double soul.

In another more extended passage he actually makes the Platonic identification of the good and the beautiful, repeating in part exactly the argument which Ford had employed in Honour Triumphant when defending the position, "Fair lady was never false" :

What I have done I'll prove both fit and good.
It is a principle which you have taught,
When I was yet your scholar, that the frame
And composition of the mind doth follow
The frame and composition of the body:
So where the body's furniture is beauty,
The mind's must needs be virtue ; which allow'd,
Virtue itself is reason but refin'd,
And love the quintessence of that: this proves,
My sister's beauty being rarely fair
Is rarely virtuous; chiefly in her love,
And chiefly in that love, her love to me.

According to the romantic creed the worship of beauty is not merely the soul's duty; it is also the soul's necessity. Hence Giovanni's reiterated accent upon fate:

Lost! I am lost! my fates have doom'd my death:
The more I strive I love.

Giovanni distinguishes between the common motions of the blood and the inexorable power not himself:

Or I must speak or burst. 'Tis not, I know,
My lust, but 'tis my fate that leads me on.

He recognizes that resistance to this power is mortal:

'Tis my destiny
That you must either love, or I must die.

Under the stress of his passion Giovanni becomes an absolutely uncompromising exponent of Ford's romantic idealism. In the first part of the play he exhibits some regard, though slight respect, for ordinary morality. But he is soon brushing aside his scruples with the impatient inquiry:

Shall a peevish sound,
A customary form, from man to man,
Of brother and of sister, be a bar
'Twixt my perpetual happiness and me?

And before long he has resolved that prayer and heaven and sin are "dreams and old men's tales to fright unsteady youth." In this conviction he is confirmed by Annabella's acknowledgment that he had captivated her heart long before he challenged her to surrender. By making her yield at once with an abandon equal to Giovanni's Ford plainly intends to show that the souls of the brother and sister were predestined for union in that Platonic heaven of lovers whence they came. With this conviction strong upon them both, they fall upon their knees and vow the most astounding vow by the sacredness of their mother's ashes to be true one to the other. It is the passionate fidelity of Giovanni to his vow, his desperate single-mindedness, which lends to this terrible transaction its evil splendor. Later, under the shadow of impending doom, the Friar makes a vain effort to shake the young man's resolution. If it were possible for a moment to forget the monstrosity of the affair, the fierce ecstasy of Giovanni's reply might stir a tragic thrill:

Friar. The throne of mercy is above your trespass;
Yet time is left you both —

Gio. To embrace each other,
Else let all time be struck quite out of number.

So, too, the martyr-like rapture of Annabella when, her crime confessed, she is threatened by her husband with instant death:

Che morte più dolce che morire per amore?

and as he hauls her up and down by the hair:

Morendo in grazia dee morire senza dolore.

As the fatal net closes around the lovers, Ford seems to summon all his powers to represent their misery as the price of their devotion to the highest ends of which their souls are capable. Giovanni nerves himself to take vengeance upon his enemies that when he falls he may die a "glorious death." He slays his sister — not in a blind rage, but to save her from the vile world — tenderly and with a kiss and crying:

— Go thou, white in thy soul, to fill a throne
— Of innocence and sanctity in heaven.

Then turning away as from the sacrifice of a white lamb without blemish to the god of love, this fervid idealist, fresh from adultery, incest and murder, bids his heart stand up and act its "last and greatest part" — another murder! Dying, he seals with his last breath his faith in the passion that has wrecked his life:

Where'er I go, let me enjoy this grace,
Freely to view my Annabella's face.

Now it appears to me incontestable that a dramatist who seeks such effects as 'Tis Pity produces must write with a conscious and clearly-defined theory. Ford cannot be explained as an imitator of his contemporaries; for his impressive attempt to make his auditors believe in the whiteness of a soul despite the abhorrent pollution of its fleshly envelope is without precedent in the English drama of his age.¹ The man is original in his fundamental conception of the nature of tragedy. I am not sure, with Havelock Ellis, that Ford "foreboded new ways of expression"; his analytic power, so much commented upon by his critics, he shares with Shakespeare and Middleton and Webster. I think it clear, however, that, so far as English drama is concerned, he did forebode a modern conception of the tragic conflict. That is to say, while his contemporaries continued to represent the tragic catastrophe as the disastrous issue of a clash between good and evil, he

¹ There is sufficient non-dramatic precedent; compare these lines from Spenser's "Hymne in Honour of Beautie":

Nathesle the soule is faire and beauteous still,
How ever fleshes fault it filthy make;
For things immortal no corruption take.

seized the subtler and more bitter and less salutary notion, familiar enough to-day, that the tragic catastrophe results from the clash of the relative good with the absolute good. In other words, he foreboded a new way of envisaging morality. Recall Giovanni's valediction to the soul of his sister, and then read these words from Maurice Maeterlinck's ¹ Treasure of the Humble :

“It would seem as though our code of morality were changing, advancing with timid steps toward loftier regions that cannot be seen. And the moment has perhaps come when certain new questions should be asked. . . . What would happen if the soul were brought into a tribunal of souls? Of what would she be ashamed? Which are the things she fain would hide? Would she, like a

¹ It is noteworthy in this connection that Maeterlinck has adapted 'Tis Pity for the modern stage: see Bibliography. M. Maeterlinck is, of course, also familiar with Platonic and Neo-Platonic theories. His modern heresy is simply a resuscitation of an obsolete, poetical commonplace.

Charles Lamb rather curiously quoted as comment upon his selection from this play a sonorous passage of Sir Thomas Browne's Pseudodoxia Epidemica, of which this is the gist: “Of sins heteroclital, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft-times a sin even in their histories.” Weber, Gifford, and Dyce in their complete editions of the tragedy have with even less appositeness reproduced the passage. Loath to depart from the fine tradition — now a century old — of remembering Browne on this occasion, I respectfully suggest to future editors of Ford the substitution of the following maxims from Christian Morals: “Live by old ethics and the classical rules of honesty. Put no new names or notions upon authentic virtues and vices. Think not that morality is ambulatory; that vices in one age are not vices in another; or that virtues, which are under the everlasting seal of right reason, may be stamped by opinion. And therefore though vicious times invert the opinions of things, and set up a new ethics against virtue, yet hold thou unto old morality.”

bashful maiden, cloak beneath her long hair the numberless sins of the flesh? She knows not of them, and those sins have never come near her. They were committed a thousand miles from her throne; and the soul even of the prostitute would pass unsuspectingly through the crowd, with the transparent smile of the child in her eyes."

Whatever we may think of Maeterlinck's mystical theory — I, for one, consider it beautiful and pernicious nonsense — it is worth while to observe that his dramatic illustration of it is entirely different from Ford's. He has the tact to perceive that plays built upon this theory have no place upon the realistic stage. He is even doubtful whether genuine tragedies of the spirit can be fitly represented by actors at all. They must touch the sympathy of the reader invisibly as he sits brooding in quietness, and like the indefinable appeal of music be felt rather than understood. Accordingly in his earlier work Maeterlinck divested his scene of every reminder of the gross and to him insignificant physical world, in order to make clear a stage for the interaction of almost disembodied spirits. In the dim light of the wan Arthurian realm where his tragedies are set, the passions ebb and flow with the tides of an unplumbed and uncharted sea, by whose waters naked soul meets naked soul under the wings of destiny. No question rises there of heredity, training, environment; for only immortal and immaterial essences are there engaged; and they cannot be affected by these mortal and material forces.

Ford's theory of the inviolability of the soul has much in common with Maeterlinck's. It seems, however, much more startling because it is clothed in very human flesh and blood, and set upon a realistic stage. Ford presents his hero and heroine, for such they must be called, in the light of common day. He prepares us for a tragedy in which we should witness the operation of the laws of this world; but he presents us a tragedy in which the protagonists are emancipated from the laws of this world, and act in accordance with the laws of a Platonized Arcadia. They are idealists in one world, but criminal degenerates in the other.

The originality of 'Tis Pity has been pretty generally conceded, at least by English critics; but it has not always been made sufficiently clear that the originality lies in the treatment and not in the choice of the theme. As a matter of fact this subject was handled by several of Ford's important contemporaries, and it may be worth while briefly to indicate their decisively different method of approaching it. The crime here involved constitutes, it will be recalled, one of the iniquitous elements in the marriage of Claudius and Gertrude in Hamlet, and it furnishes a shuddering background of horror for the first act of Pericles. To the healthy mind of Shakespeare it is clearly a matter abhorrent. It is a part of a tangled web of lust which Tourneur made into the Revenger's Tragedy. But though Tourneur chose corrupt material, he dealt with it in a sound fashion. With him there was no poetical glozing, no veil of illusion cloaking the beast, no scape-goat fate occupying the place of the abdicating will, no "higher morality" subtly aspersing common decency. When his characters commit gross or unnatural crimes, he makes it perfectly apparent that the moving force is bestial drunkenness or physical degeneracy, not celestial foreordination. Thus the incestuous Spurio cries:

I was begot in impudent wine and lust.
Step-mother, I consent to thy desires.

Beaumont and Fletcher's King and No King has for its central theme the love of Arbaces for his supposed sister, Panthea. But in the end it transpires that Arbaces is a changeling, and in reality not related at all to Panthea. Nevertheless the authors do not wholly rely upon the unexpected denouement to explain the moral aberration of the hero. They tell us in the first place that Panthea was but nine years old when Arbaces left her not to return till she had reached her maturity; consequently he appears to be smitten rather with a fair stranger than with a sister. And in the second place they spare no pains to present him as a man of abnormally violent and unruly temperament. Furthermore, when after fearful struggles his passion begins to master him, he does not justify himself as an apostle of love and beauty and their "higher" reasonableness; on the contrary he declares:

I have lost
The only difference betwixt man and beast,
My reason.

And Panthea, instead of admitting with Annabella that her lover has "won the field and never fought," swears that she would rather "search out death" than "welcome such a sin." Fortunately Beaumont and Fletcher rescue her from the predicament by showing that the dilemma never existed. In Brome's Love-Sick

Court the supposedly incestuous passion, which is a subsidiary element in the play, is in a similar way proved innocent by disclosures in the last act. Between Middleton's Women Beware Women and 'Tis Pity there is a very considerable parallelism of situation; in both plays there is a group of uncle, nephew and servant engaged in the courtship of a woman already involved in criminal relations with a near kinsman. But parallelism of treatment there is not. For one thing, the criminal relationship is entered upon in partial ignorance of its nature; for another, there is not the slightest attempt to idealize the character of the union. The play is constructed by a realist who is interested in showing how crime punishes itself by natural laws. In the Unnatural Combat—of which the title alone suggests a significant difference from 'Tis Pity—Massinger presents a situation similar to that of Shelley's Cenci, and treats it with artistic seriousness and the most uncompromising moral severity. He prepares the way for Malefort's ultimate degradation by making him the poisoner of his wife and the murderer of his son before he becomes the lover of his daughter. And yet he makes even Malefort shudder before his last temptation and clearly recognize its character: Malefort, infinitely wickeder and wiser than Giovanni, says in so many words that the torch which kindles his wild desires was not lighted at Cupid's altars, but was thrown into his bosom from hell. Vile though he is, he possesses the moral vision and candor of the Shakesporean villain. His passion, needless to say, is not reciprocated. He dies, not like Giovanni resolute and unshaken in his sinister idealism but rather like Marlowe's Faustus, in terrific moral agony, cursing his "cause of being." The tragedy ends with a tremendous vindication of "the sacred laws of God and man prophaned"; the last speech of Malefort is cut short by a thunderbolt which kills him. That flash of lightning may fairly be considered as Massinger's comment on incest — a comment, on the whole, rather more illuminating and salutary than the tearful couplet in which Ford's Cardinal bids a compassionate adieu to Annabella.

This examination of plays related in subject to 'Tis Pity serves but to emphasize Ford's independence of his English contemporaries so far as treatment is concerned. I have, nevertheless, taken pains to say that his attitude toward incestuous passion is without precedent in English drama. It is not without precedent in Italian drama. I refer to a play which so far as I know has never been employed to explain 'Tis Pity — Canace è Macareo, a tragedy written on classical models by Sperone Speroni, a distinguished critic, orator, and poet of the sixteenth century. If, as Professor Schelling asserts, Ford did indeed show a remarkable "freedom from the influence of Italian models,"¹ the analogies between these two plays, both in plot and in treatment, are surprising. If Ford did not write with a knowledge of Speroni's work, he at least wrote thoroughly in the spirit of it. It may even be said, I think without danger of contradiction, that Canace è Macareo is a more plausible "source" for 'Tis Pity than anything that has been proposed heretofore.

¹ Elizabethan Drama, vol. II, p. 333. The statement may have been influenced by Koepfel, Quellen-Studien, p. 176: "Ford's literarisches Lebenswerk ist fast ganz frei von italienischen Einflüssen."

The Italian play is a humanized dramatization of a myth treated by Ovid in Heroides, XI, a frequent point of reference for Elizabethan casuists. The theme is the tragical ending of the incestuous loves of Canace and Macareo, the fair son and daughter of Eolo (Æolus). As in 'Tis Pity, their criminal intercourse is revealed by its unhappy fruit. On discovering the state of affairs, Eolo forces his daughter to kill herself. Macareo takes his own life. As in 'Tis Pity, the lovers die amid the suspended gayety of a birthday celebration. The nurse of Canace corresponds accurately in function to the "tutoress" of Annabella; the servant of Macareo corresponds roughly to the confessor of Giovanni; and there are some other minor correspondences.

The really striking parallelism, however, is in the treatment. Speroni, like Ford, bends all his energies to the task of soliciting pity and admiration for the unnatural lovers. He, too, insists that they are driven on not by lust but by fate or divine foreordering:

Ma quel vero intelletto, che dal cielo
 Alla mente materna
 Mostra in sogno il mio error sotto alcun velo,
 Sa bien che 'l mio peccato,
 Non malizia mortale,
 Ma fu celeste forza,
 Che ogni nostra virtù vince ed ammorza.

He, too, makes his hero a Renaissance Platonist, identifying the good and the beautiful and the worship of beauty with the love of virtue. Macareo, like Giovanni, regards his love as a proof of his intelligence:

Amo infinitamente e volentieri
 Le bellezze, i costumi, e le virtuti
 Di mia sorella, e parmi
 Che indegnamente degno
 Saria di sentimento e di ragione,
 Chi sì rare eccellenze non amasse,
 Ovunque ei le trovasse.

When danger threatens, Macareo is ready to rush on death without fear, for the fatal blade will release from the erring flesh his immaculate soul (l'anima immacolata). In the other world he hopes to be reunited to his sister; even the verbal parallelism is close here. Anticipating Giovanni's

Where'er I go, let me enjoy this grace,
 Freely to view my Annabella's face

Macareo says:

In eterno vivrà l'anima mia:
 E fia suo paradiso
 Il poter vagheggiare
 L'ombra del suo bel viso.

Both lovers die unrepentant and in unshaken loyalty to each other. Canace, on her deathbed, says that her one consolation is the knowledge that her name and face will live in the heart of her brother, to whom she sends this message:

Moriamo volentieri,
 Tu per esser fedele, io per amare.

This is precisely the spirit of Annabella's

Che morte più dolce che morire per amore?

After the death of the children, Eolo repents of his part in it, and declares that he has earned for himself eternal infamy by ending the lives of those whose only fault was that they loved. For, says he, "present and future times, forgetting their amorous errors, will blame only my cruelty." Here Eolo anticipates the opinion of Giovanni,

If ever after-times should hear
Of our fast-knit affections, though perhaps
The laws of conscience and of civil use
May justly blame us, yet when they but know
Our loves, that love will wipe away that rigour
Which would in other incests be abhorred.

Canace è Macareo seems to have impressed Speroni's contemporaries much as 'Tis Pity impresses us to-day; for in the polite and learned circles of sixteenth century Italy it produced a critical controversy as interesting as the play itself. The summaries and fragments of the lectures in defense of the tragedy delivered in the Accademia degli Elevati in Padua are particularly illuminating, because they express substantially what Ford would probably have said had he been challenged to defend 'Tis Pity. Since it is by no means impossible that Ford knew Speroni's defense as well as his drama, it may not be amiss briefly to suggest the nature of his arguments.¹

¹ Sperone Speroni was born in 1500 and died in 1588. As a young man he was professor of logic at Padua. In 1528 he resigned his chair and devoted himself to a life of scholarly leisure. In 1546 the first authentic edition of Canace was published. This tragedy gave rise to a critical controversy which continued intermittently till 1590. Speroni was also author of numerous critical treatises and dialogues on language, love, ladies, etc., and was a copious correspondent with Italian poets and men of letters. In 1551 eight of the dialogues were translated into French. (Upon the

The weightiest charge against Canace à Macareo was that the chief characters, being thoroughly vicious (scelerate), had according to Aristotelian canons no place in tragedy. To this the reply is made that they actually appeared in tragedy of Aristotle's day, and that they are not thoroughly vicious, but middling characters, neither perfectly good nor perfectly bad. In this connection, Speroni reminds his hearers of two arguments urged by Dejopeja, wife of Eolo. The children did not deserve death, she maintained, first, because they had merely done per forza what the gods do per volontà in heaven; second, because they had done that in the Iron Age which was permitted in the innocent Age of Gold. This position is supported by a multitude of references to the poets. Then, glancing at the customs of the ancient Persians and Egyptians, considerable fame and influence of Speroni in France see Les Sources Italiennes de la "Défense et Illustration de la Langue Française," Pierre Villey, Paris, 1908.) Professor Spingarn informs me that there are "constant allusions to him in the earlier French criticism — e.g., La Mesnardière, Poétique, 1640"; it seems probable that English acquaintance with him in the seventeenth century was frequently second hand. The earliest English reference that I find is in Coryat's Crudities, 1611. Coryat describes the statue of Speroni in the Palace at Padua and transcribes the Latin epitaph beneath it. At this time, says Coryat, there were 1500 students at the university — among them many Englishmen. Later references and allusions may be found in Sir William Alexander's Anacrisis, ? 1634 (Spingarn's Critical Essays of the Seventeenth Century, 1, 185); Butler's Upon Critics, ? 1678 (Critical Essays, II, 280); Rymer's Tragedies of the Last Age, 1678 (page 77 in the second edition, 1692) — Rymer gives the plot of Canace at some length and discusses it; Dryden's Sylvaë, 1685 (Ker's Essays of John Dryden, 1, 256).

Speroni comes to a point of distinct coincidence with Ford, namely, that the union of brother and sister is forbidden not by nature but by the laws, and not even by all laws. Therefore, as the example of the best poets proves, things done under the influence of immeasurable love are not to be classed as criminal. "It may be objected," he says in substance, "that I myself have in the play called the lovers scelerate. Not so; do not confound me with the persons of the tragedy."

In his second lecture Speroni attempts to prove that pity falls justly in every case upon those who have suffered for love. To defend this position he resorts to exactly that form of romantic logic which we observed in Ford's youthful pamphlets and later in the mouth of Giovanni. It is the privilege of unfortunate lovers to be pitied; for love is the desire of beauty. The recognition of beauty is the function of man which distinguishes him from the brute. It is peculiar to man to recognize and delight in beauty, because it is the function of reason. For beauty consists in proportion, and agreement and order of the parts; but where these exist, there are also prius and posterius and antecedens and consequens; and these things can be recognized only by the reason. Therefore man alone knows beauty, and exhibits his reason by delighting in it. It is, in short, the privilege of unfortunate lovers to be pitied, because they have come to grief through the exercise of their highest faculty. To make the contention specific, "the love of the twins of the tragedy is not disonesto," because the "love of country and of glory is not so peculiar to a human being as that love which is desire of beauty. Therefore, sin caused by this latter is more human, because this species is found only in man; but the other two are found also in other animals.”

I have dwelt at considerable length upon the tragedy and the criticism of the “Plato” of the Paduan academy because in this forgotten Italian material are to be found the full illustration and the explicit theory of every singular characteristic in Ford’s most individual play. Here is the Platonic theology of love — its logic, its insistence upon the inviolability of the soul, its mystical reverence of passion, and its earnest fatalism — seriously applied to the extenuation of hideous crime and to the glorification of the criminals. If Canace è Macareo was not the direct source of ’Tis Pity, it was at any rate a noteworthy tributary to that stream of bewildering and dangerous neo-pagan ideas which flowed into England from Italy, and made the production of ’Tis Pity possible. The decadent and vicious idealism of both of these tragedies — this is perhaps sufficient justification for considering them attentively — is the fruit of the general moral and intellectual emancipation of the Renaissance.

From this survey of Ford’s work it should appear plainly enough that he was not one of the myriad-minded and puissant men of the age, to whom nothing human was alien. It seems as if temperament, culture, and the time-spirit had conspired to make him a writer of originality and power only within extremely narrow limits. I have said that his reputation rests upon his three tragedies, and one of them, Love’s Sacrifice, is a failure. It would scarcely be going too far to say that no contributive tendency and no excellence of artistic achievement peculiarly his would be ignored if he were remembered only by the two plays included in this volume. Here are his best plots; all but one — Bianca — of his memorable characters; his sweetest poetry; his fundamental and creative ideas. His amorous and melancholic temperament tended to restrict his outlook, even from youth, to the field of love and sexual passion. His reading in the romantic literature of the last quarter of the sixteenth century confirmed his natural bent, and added to his emotions whatever intellectual content was possessed by the Platonic theology of love. If his legal training affected his literary processes, I suspect we may discover traces of its influence in the proclivity of his characters for deciding cases of conscience on grounds of equity and natural reason. As a lawyer he may easily have learned a certain disrespect for the law in so far as it is a body of rules based upon social expediency rather than upon absolute justice. Furthermore, he found a curious corroboration of the scholastic fatalism and rationalism of his youth in the medical rationalism of Burton. All these forces, bearing upon a mind as earnest and as humorless as Shelley's, produced in Ford a disdain for vulgar orthodoxy, and made him a romantic rationalist in morals. After a generation of great dramatists had spoken, he had still something to say. He had to say that the essence of tragedy is the defeat of the ideal by the real world. In order to explain the idea dramatically he had to invent the problem play. If he could have supported his theory of tragedy by a series of such fine and effective illustrations as the Broken Heart, he would have made himself a large and secure place in literature. Unfortunately, however, his experience, judgment, and common sense were unequal to the task. His talent was limited by a morbid temperament. His intellectual grasp was weak when he wrote Love's Sacrifice. When he wrote 'Tis Pity, though every artistic faculty was alert, he was deserted by common-sense.

THE TEXT

THE text here printed follows the first and only seventeenth-century edition, the quarto of 1633. Dyce discovered two or three minute differences in the copies he examined; but there seems to have been no second quarto edition of any play produced by Ford independently. The quarto has been compared with Weber's edition in the Dramatic Works of John Ford, 1811, and with the Gifford-Dyce edition in the Works of John Ford, 1895. Weber's notoriously defective edition was a lively provocative to accuracy in Gifford's edition of 1827. But though Gifford decisively superseded Weber, his own editorial work was by no means flawless, and he permitted himself editorial licenses no longer approved. For the revised edition of 1869 Dyce thoroughly overhauled Gifford's text, comparing it with various copies of the quartos, and restoring original readings or noting them among the variants. The 1895 edition is a re-issue "with further additions" [by A. H. Bullen]. There still remain some needless corrections, numerous expansions of colloquial contractions, and changes in the stage directions. In the present editions variants of Gifford-Dyce (G-D) are recorded when they are of interest or importance to the text.

The spelling of the quarto has been restored, except that the old forms of j, s, and v have not been retained, and obvious misprints — such as an n for a u — have been silently corrected. Capitalization and punctuation have been modernized, and commas have been substituted for the characteristic parentheses enclosing the nominative of direct address. Changes or additions in the text are indicated by brackets or foot-notes or both. The name of each character is printed in full at his first appearance in each scene, and then is uniformly abbreviated without reference to sporadic variations. The division and placing of the scenes is based on that of the Gifford-Dyce edition.

TIS
Pitty Shee sa Whore

Acted by the Queenes Maiesties Ser-uants, at The Phanix in Drury-Lane.

L O N D O N.
Printed by Nicholas Okes for Richard
Collins, and are to be sold at his shop in Pauls Church-yard, at the signe of the three Kings. 1633.

SOURCES

No perfectly certain source of this play has been discovered. Events in some respects similar to those of the tragedy are said to have taken place in Normandy in 1603. An account of them is given by the chronicler Pierre Matthieu in his Histoire de France et des Choses Memorables . . ., published in Paris, 1606. The story is retold by François de Rosset in Les Histoires Tragiques de Nostre Temps. It is the fifth tale in the second edition, 1615; the seventh in the edition of 1619. Wolff declares outright that Ford took his plot from this source. (See John Forde ein Nachahmer Shakespeare's, page 8). But Koepfel approves Dyce's observation that "though Ford may probably have read it, there are no particular resemblances between it and the play." (See Koepfel's Quellen-Studien, page 180; also, Gifford-Dyce, Introduction, page xxx.)

A great part of the Shakesporean influence which Wolff attempted to trace in this play is purely imaginary. It is not difficult, however, to see a certain general likeness between Friar Bonaventura and Friar Laurence, and — to a less degree — between other characters of 'Tis Pity and Romeo and Juliet.

As a possible indirect source W. Bang and H. de Vocht suggest the Περὶ ἐρωτικῶν παθημάτων of Parthenios of Nikaia. See Englische Studien, Band 36, pp. 392-93 (1906).

There is a striking parallelism — hitherto, I think, unnoticed — between Annabella, Donado, Bergetto, and Poggio; and Isabella, Guardiano, the Ward, and Sordido in Middleton's Women Beware Women. The resemblance is the more worth noting as the same element of unnatural passion enters into the intrigue of both plays.

In my introduction I have discussed at some length an impressive analogue and possible source of 'Tis Pity in Speroni's Canace à Macareo.

TO THE TRUELY NOBLE,
JOHN
EARLE OF PETERBOROUGH, LORD
MORDANT,
BARON OF TURVEY

My Lord,

Where a truth of meritt hath a generall warrant, there love is but a debt, acknowledgement a justice. Greatnesse cannot often claime virtue by inheritance ; yet in this, yours appears most eminent, for that you are not more rightly heyre to your fortunes, then glory shalbe to your memory. Sweetnesse of disposition ennobles a freedome of birth ; in both, your lawfull interest adds honour to your owne name, and mercy to my presumption. Your noble allowance of these first fruites of my leasure in the action, emboldens my confidence of your as noble construction in this presentment : especially since my service must ever owe particular duty to your favours, by a particular ingagement. The gravity of the subject may easily excuse the leightnesse of the title : otherwise, I had beene a severe judge against mine owne guilt. Princes have vouchsaf't grace to trifles, offred from a purity of devotion ; your Lordship may likewise please to admit into your good opinion, with these weake endeavours, the constancy of affection from the sincere lover of your deserts in honour.

JOHN FORD.

The Sceane.

PARMA

THE ACTORS' NAMES.

BONAVENTURA, a fryar.

A CARDINALL, nuntio to the Pope.

SORANZO, a nobleman.

FLORIO, a cittizen of Parma.

DONADO, another cittizen.

GRIMALDI, a Roman gentleman.

GIOVANNI, sonne to Florio.

BERGETTO, nephew to Donado.

RICHARDETTO, a suppos'd phisitian.

VASQUES, servant to Soranzo.

POGGIO, servant to Bergetto.

BANDETTI.

Woemen

ANNABELLA, daughter to Florio.

HIPPOLITA, wife to Richardetto.

PHILOTIS, his neece.

PUTANA, tutresse to Annabella.

[Officers, Attendants, Servants, &c.]

The Sceane. In the quarto this page immediately follows the title-page.

'Tis Pitty Shee's a Whoore

[ACTUS PRIMUS. SCENA PRIMA.

Friar Bonaventura's cell.]

Enter Fryar and Giovanni.

Fryar. Dispute no more in this; for know,
young man,
These are no schoole-points; nice philosophy
May tolerate unlikely arguments,
But heaven admits no jest; wits that presum'd
On wit too much, — by striving how to prove 5
There was no God, — with foolish grounds of art
Discover'd first the neerest way to hell,
And filld the world with develish atheisme:
Such questions, youth, are fond; for better 'tis
To blesse the sunne then reason why it shines; 10
Yet hee thou talk'st of is above the sun.
No more; I may not heare it.

Giovanni. Gentle father,
To you I have unclasp't my burthened soule, Empty'd the store-house of my thoughts and
heart,

Made my selfe poore of secrets; have not left 15
 Another word untold, which hath not spoke
 All what I ever durst or thinke or know;
 And yet is here the comfort I shall have,
 Must I not doe what all men else may, — love?

Fry. Yes, you may love, faire sonne.

Gio. Must I not praise 20
 That beauty which, if fram'd a new, the gods
 Would make a god of, if they had it there,
 And kneele to it, as I doe kneele to them?

Fry. Why, foolish madman, —

Gio. Shall a peevish sound, 25
 A customary forme, from man to man,
 Of brother and of sister, be a barre
 Twixt my perpetuall happinesse and mee?
 Say that we had one father, say one wombe —
 Curse to my joyes — gave both us life and birth;
 Are wee not therefore each to other bound 30
 So much the more by nature, by the links
 Of blood, of reason, — nay, if you will hav't, —
 Even of religion, to be ever one,
 One soule, one flesh, one love, one heart, one all?

Fry. Have done, unhappy youth, for thou art lost. 35

Gio. Shall, then, for that I am her brother borne,
 My joyes be ever banisht from her bed?

No, father; in your eyes I see the change
 Of pittie and compassion; from your age,
 As from a sacred oracle, distills 40

The life of counsell: tell mee, holy man,
 What cure shall give me ease in these extreames.

Fry. Repentance, sonne, and sorrow for this sinne:

For thou hast mov'd a Majesty above
 With thy un-raunged almost blasphemy. 45

Gio. O, doe not speake of that, deare confessor!

Fry. Art thou, my sonne, that miracle of wit
 Who once, within these three moneths, wert esteem'd

A wonder of thine age throughout Bononia?
 How did the University applaud 50

Thy goverment, behaviour, learning, speech,
 Sweetnesse, and all that could make up a man!
 I was proud of my tutelage, and chose

Rather to leave my bookes then part with thee;
 I did so: but the fruites of all my hopes 55

Are lost in thee, as thou art in thy selfe.

O, Giovanni! hast thou left the schooles
 Of knowledge to converse with lust and death?

For death waites on thy lust. Looke through the world,

And thou shalt see a thousand faces shine 60
 More glorious then this idoll thou ador'st:

Leave her, and take thy choyce, 'tis much lesse
sinne ;

Though in such games as those, they lose that winne.

Gio. It were more ease to stop the ocean
From floates and ebbs then to disswade my vowes.

Fry. Then I have done, and in thy wilfull flames

Already see thy ruine ; heaven is just,
Yet heare my counsell.

Gio. As a voyce of life.

Fry. Hye to thy fathers house, there locke thee fast

Alone within thy chamber, then fall downe 70
On both thy knees, and grovell on the ground :
Cry to thy heart, wash every word thou utter'st
In teares,—and if't bee possible,—of blood :
Begge heaven to cleanse the leprosie of lust
That rots thy soule, acknowledge what thou art, 75
A wretch, a worme, a nothing : weepe, sigh, pray
Three times a day and three times every night :
For seven dayes space doe this ; then if thou find'st

No change in thy desires, returne to me :
I'le thinke on remedy. Pray for thy selfe 80
At home, whil'st I pray for thee here. Away !
My blessing with thee. Wee have neede to pray !

Gio. All this I'le doe, to free mee from the rod
Of vengeance ; else I'le sweare my fate's my god.

Exeunt.

[SCENA SECUNDA.

The street before Florio's house.]

Enter Grimaldi and Vasques ready to fight.

Vasques. Come, sir, stand to your tackling ; if you prove craven, I'le make you run quickly.

Grimaldi. Thou art no equall match for mee.

Vas. Indeed, I never went to the warres to bring home newes ; nor cannot play the moun- 5 tibanke for a meales meate, and sweare I got my wounds in the field. See you these gray haire ?
They'le not flinch for a bloody nose. Wilt thou to this geere ?

Gri. Why, slave, think'st thou I'le ballance 10 my reputation with a cast-suite ? Call thy maister ;
he shall know that I dare —

Vas. Scold like a cot-queane, — that's your profession. Thou poore shaddow of a souldier,
I will make thee know my maister keepes ser- 15
vants thy betters in quality and performance.
Com'st thou to fight or prate ?

Gri. Neither, with thee ; I am a Romane and a gentleman, one that have got mine honour with expence of blood. 20

Vas. You are a lying coward and a foole!

18-20 Neither . . . blood. Q prints as verse.

Fight, or, by these hilts, I'le kill thee, — brave my lord! — you'le fight.

Gri. Provoake me not, for if thou dost —

Vas. Have at you!

They fight; Grimal. bath the worst.

Enter Florio, Donado, Soranzo.

Florio. What meaned these sudden broyles so neare my dores? 25

Have you not other places but my house
To vent the spleene of your disordered bloods?
Must I be haunted still with such unrest
As not to eate or sleepe in peace at home?
Is this your love, Grimaldi? Fie, 't is naught. 30

Donado. And, Vasques, I may tell thee, 'tis not well

To broach these quarrels; you are ever forward

In seconding contentions.

Enter above Annabella and Putana.

Flo. What's the ground?

Soranzo. That, with your patience, signiors, I'le resolve:

This gentleman, whom fame reports a souldier, — 35

For else I know not, — rivals mee in love
To Signior Florio's daughter; to whose eares
He still prefers his suite to my disgrace,

Thinking the way to recommend himselfe
Is to disparage me in his report: 40

But know, Grimaldi, though, may be, thou art
My equall in thy blood, yet this bewrayes
A lownesse in thy minde; which, wer't thou noble,

Thou would'st as much disdain as I doe thee
For this unworthinesse; and on this ground 45
I will'd my servant to correct his tongue,
Holding a man so base no match for me.

Vas. And had [not] your sudd[en] comming prevented us, I had let my gentleman blood under the gilles; I should have worm'd you, sir, for 50 running madde.

Gri. Ile be reveng'd, Soranzo.

Vas. On a dish of warme-broth to stay your stomack — doe, honest innocence, doe! Sponemeat is a wholesomer dyet then a Spannish blade. 55

Gri. Remember this!

Sor. I feare thee not, Grimaldi.

Ex. Gri.

Flo. My Lord Soranzo, this is strange to me,
Why you should storme, having my word en-gag'd;

Owing her heart, what neede you doubt her eare?

Loosers may talke by law of any game. 60

Vas. Yet the villaine of words, Signior Florio, may be such as would make any unspleen'd dove chollerick; blame not my lord in this.

Flo. Be you more silent;
I would not for my wealth, my daughters love 63
Should cause the spilling of one drop of blood.
Vasques, put up: let's end this fray in wine.

Exeunt.

Putana. How like you this, child? Here's threatning, challenging, quarrelling, and fighting on every side, and all is for your sake; you had 70 neede looke to your selfe, chardge; you'le be stolne away sleeping else shortly.

Annabella. But, tutresse, such a life gives no content

To me; my thoughts are fixt on other ends.
Would you would leave me! 75

Put. Leave you? No marvaile else; leave me no leaving, chardge. This is love outright. In-deede, I blame you not; you have choyce fit for the best lady in Italy.

Anna. Pray doe not talke so much. 80

Put. Take the worst with the best, there's Grimaldi the souldier, a very well-timbred fellow: they say he is a Roman, nephew to the Duke Mount Ferratto; they say he did good service in the warrs against the Millanoyes; but, faith, 85
chardge, I doe not like him, and be for nothing but for being a souldier: one amongst twenty of your skirmishing captaines but have some pryvie mayme or other that marres their standing upright. I like him the worse, hee crinckles 90 so much in the hams; though hee might serve if their were no more men, — yet hee's not the man I would choose.

Anna. Fye, how thou prat'st!

Put. As I am a very woman, I like Signiour 95 Soranzo well: hee is wise, and what is more, rich; and what is more then that, kind; and what is more then all this, a noble-man; such a one, were I the faire Annabella my selfe, I would wish and pray for. Then hee is bounti-100 full; besides, hee is handsome, and, by my troth, I thinke, wholsome — and that's newes in a gallant of three and twenty; liberall, that I know; loving, that you know; and a man sure, else hee could never ha' purchast such a good name with 105 Hippolita, the lustie widdow, in her husbands life time. And 'twere but for that report, sweet heart, would 'a were thine! Commend a man for his qualities, but take a husband as he is a plaine-sufficient, naked man: such a one is for 110 your bed, and such a one is Signior Soranzo, my life for't.

Anna. Sure the woman tooke her mornings draught to soone.

Enter Bergetto and Poggio.

Put. But looke, sweet heart, looke what thinge 115 comes now! Here's another of your cyphers to fill up the number: Oh, brave old ape in a silken coate! Observe.

Ber. Dids't thou thinke, Poggio, that I would spoyle my new cloathes, and leave my dinner to 120 fight?

Pog. No, sir, I did not take you for so arrant a babie.

Ber. I am wyser then so: for I hope, Poggio, thou never heard'st of an elder brother that was 125
a coxcomb; dids't, Poggio?

Pog. Never, indeede, sir, as long as they had either land or mony left them to inherit.

Ber. Is it possible, Poggio? Oh, monstrous!
Why, Ile undertake with a handfull of silver to 130
buy a headfull of wit at any tyme: but, sirrah, I have another purchase in hand. I shall have the wench, myne unckle sayes. I will but wash my face, and shift socks, and then have at her, yfaith . . . Marke my pace, Poggio! 135

Pog. Sir, I have seene an asse and a mule trot the Spanish pavin with a better grace, I know not how often. Exeunt.

Anna. This ideot haunts me too.

Put. I, I, he needes no discription. The rich 140
magnifico that is below with your father, chardge,

Signior Donado his unckle, for that he meanes to make this, his cozen, a golden calfe, thinkes that you wil be a right Isralite, and fall downe to him presently: but I hope I have tuted you ¹⁴⁵ better. They say a fooles bable is a ladies play-fellow; yet you, having wealth enough, you neede not cast upon the dearth of flesh at any rate. Hang him, innocent!

Enter Giovanni.

Anna. But see, Putana, see! What blessed shape 150

Of some cælestiall creature now appears!
What man is hee that with such sad aspect
Walkes carelesse of him selfe?

Put. Where?

Anna. Looke below.

Put. Oh, 'tis your brother, sweet.

Anna. Ha!

Put. 'Tis your brother.

Anna. Sure 'tis not hee; this is some woefull
thinge 155

Wrapt up in grieffe, some shaddow of a man.
Alas, hee beats his brest, and wipes his eyes,
Drown'd all in teares: me thinkes I heare him sigh.
Lets downe, Putana, and pertake the cause.
I know my brother in the love he beares me 160
Will not denye me partage in his sadnesse—
My soule is full of heavinesse and feare.

Exit [above with Putana].

[SCENA TERTIA.

A ball in Florio's house.]

Giovanni. Lost! I am lost! my fates have doom'd my death:

The more I strive, I love; the more I love,
The lesse I hope: I see my ruine certaine.

What judgement or endevors could apply
To my incurable and restlesse wounds,

I throughly have examin'd, but in vaine. 5

O that it were not in religion sinne

To make our love a god, and worship it!

I have even wearied heaven with prayers, dried up

The spring of my continuall teares, even sterv'd 10

My veines with dayly fasts: what wit or art

Could counsaile, I have practiz'd; but, alas,

I find all these but dreames and old mens tales

To fright unsteady youth; I'me still the same:

Or I must speake or burst; tis not, I know, 15

My lust, but 'tis my fate that leads me on.

Keepe feare and low faint hearted shame with slaves!

I'le tell her that I love her, though my heart

Were rated at the price of that attempt.

Oh me! she comes.

Enter Anna. and Putana.

Annabella. Brother!

Gio. [aside]. If such a thing 20

As courage dwell in men, yee heavenly powers,
Now double all that virtue in my tongue!

Anna. Why, brother,
Will you not speake to me?

Gio. Yes: how d'ee, sister?

Anna. Howsoever I am, me thinks you are not well. 25

Putana. Blesse us! why are you so sad, sir?

Gio. Let me intreat you, leave us awhile, Putana.

Sister, I would be pryvate with you.

Anna. With-drawe, Putana.

Put. I will. — [Aside.] If this were any 30 other company for her, I should thinke my absence an office of some credit; but I will leave them together. Exit Putana.

Gio. Come, sister, lend your hand: let's walke together.

I hope you neede not blush to walke with mee; 35
Here's none but you and I.

Anna. How's this?

Gio. Faith,

I meane no harme.

Anna. Harme?

Gio. No, good faith.

How is't with 'ee?

Anna. I trust hee be not franticke —
I am very well, brother.

Gio. Trust me, but I am sicke: I feare so sick

'Twill cost my life. 40

Anna. Mercy forbid it! 'tis not so, I hope.

Gio. I thinke you love me, sister.

Anna. Yes, you know

I doe.

Gio. I know't, indeed — y'are very faire.

Anna. Nay, then, I see you have a merry sickness. 45

Gio. That's as it proves: the poets faigne, I read,

That Juno for her forehead did exceede
All other goddesses; but I durst sweare
Your forehead exceeds hers, as hers did theirs.

Anna. Troth, this is pretty!

Gio. Such a paire of starres 50
As are thine eyes would, like Promethean fire,
If gently glaun'st, give life to senselesse stones.

Anna. Fie upon 'ee!

Gio. The lilly and the rose, most sweetly strainge,
Upon your dimpled cheekes doe strive for change. 55

44 I doe. Q prints with line above.

46 the. Q, they.

49 theirs. G, theirs. D, their.

Such lippes would tempt a saint ; such hands as those

Would make an anchoret lascivious.

Anna. D'ee mock mee or flatter mee?

Gio. If you would see a beauty more exact
Then art can counterfit or nature frame, 60
Looke in your glasse, and there behold your owne.

Anna. O, you are a trime youth.

Gio. Here ! Offers his dagger to her.

Anna. What to doe ?

Gio. And here's my breast ; strike home !
Rip up my bosome ; there thou shalt behold
A heart in which is writ the truth I speake. 65
Why stand 'ee?

Anna. Are you earnest ?

Gio. Yes, most earnest.

You cannot love?

Anna. Whom?

Gio. Me ! My tortur'd soule
Hath felt affliction in the heate of death —
O Annabella, I am quite undone !
The love of thee, my sister, and the view 70
Of thy immortall beauty hath untun'd
All harmony both of my rest and life.
Why d'ee not strike?

Anna. Forbid it, my just feares !
If this be true, 'twere fitter I were dead.

Gio. True, Annabella; 'tis no time to jest. 75
I have too long suppress the hidden flames
That almost have consum'd me: I have spent
Many a silent night in sighes and groanes,
Ran over all my thoughts, despis'd my fate,
Reason'd against the reasons of my love, 80
Done all that smooth'd-cheeke vertue could advise;

But found all bootelesse: 'tis my destiny
That you must eyther love, or I must dye.

Anna. Comes this in sadnesse from you?

Gio. Let some mischief
Befall me soone, if I dissemble ought. 85

Anna. You are my brother, Giovanni.

Gio. You,
My sister Annabella; I know this,
And could afford you instance why to love
So much the more for this; to which intent
Wise nature first in your creation ment 90
To make you mine; else't had beene sinne and foule

To share one beauty to a double soule.
Neerensse in birth or blood doth but perswade
A neerer neerensse in affection.
I have askt counsell of the holy church, 95

81 smooth'd-cheeke. Altered by G to smooth-cheek'd.

93 or. G-D, and.

Who tells mee I may love you ; and 'tis just
That, since I may, I should ; and will, yes, will !

Must I now live or dye ?

Anna. Live ; thou hast wonne
The field, and never fought ; what thou hast urg'd

My captive heart had long agoe resolv'd. 100

I blush to tell thee, — but I'le tell thee now, —

For every sigh that thou hast spent for me

I have sigh'd ten ; for every teare shed twenty :

And not so much for that I lov'd, as that

I durst not say I lov'd, nor scarcely thinke it. 105

Gio. Let not this musicke be a dreame, yee gods,

For pittie's-sake, I begge 'ee.

Anna. On my knees, Shee kneeles.

Brother, even by our mothers dust, I charge
you,

Doe not betray mee to your mirth or hate :

Love mee or kill me, brother.

Gio. On my knees, He kneeles. 110

Sister, even by my mothers dust, I charge you,

Doe not betray mee to your mirth or hate :

Love mee or kill mee, sister.

Anna. You meane good sooth, then ?

Gio. In good troth, I doe ;

And so doe you, I hope : say, I'm in earnest. 115

Anna. I'le swear't, and I.

Gio. And I; and by this kisse, —
Kisses her.

Once more! yet once more! now let's rise, —
by this,

I would not change this minute for Elyzium.

What must we now doe?

Anna. What you will.

Gio. Come, then;

After so many teares as wee have wept, 120

Let's learne to court in smiles, to kisse and sleepe. Exeunt.

[SCENA QUARTA. A street.]

Enter Florio and Donado.

Florio. Signior Donado, you have sayd enough —

I understand you; but would have you know

I will not force my daughter 'gainst her will.

You see I have but two, a sonne and her;

And hee is so devoted to his booke, 5

As I must tell you true, I doubt his health:

Should he miscarry, all my hopes rely

Upon my girle. As for worldly fortune,

I am, I thanke my starres, blest with enough.

My care is how to match her to her liking: 10

I would not have her marry wealth, but love;
 And if she like your nephew, let him have her.
 Here's all that I can say.

Donado. Sir, you say well,
 Like a true father; and, for my part, I,
 If the young folkes can like,—twixt you and me, —

Will promise to assure my nephew presently
 Three thousand florrens yeerely during life,
 And after I am dead my whole estate. 15

Flo. 'Tis a faire proffer, sir, meane time your nephew

Shall have free passage to commence his suite: 20
 If hee can thrive, hee shall have my consent.
 So for this time I'le leave you, signior. Exit.

Do. Well,
 Here's hope yet, if my nephew would have wit;

But hee is such another dunce, I feare Hee'le never winne the wench. When I was young, 25

I could have done't, yfaith; and so shall hee,
 If hee will learne of mee; and, in good time,
 Hee comes himselfe.

Enter Bergetto and Poggio.

How now, Bergetto, whether away so fast?

Bergetto. Oh, unkle, I have heard the strangest 30

29 How now . . . fast? Q gives this to Poggio.

newes that ever came out of the mynt! Have I not, Poggio?

Poggio. Yes, indeede, sir.

Do. What newes, Bergetto?

Ber. Why, looke yee, unkle, my barber told me just now that there is a fellow come to towne who undertakes to make a mill goe without the mortall helpe of any water or winde, onely with sand-bags: and this fellow hath a strange horse, a most excellent beast, I'le assure you, unkle, my barber sayes, whose head to the wonder of all Christian people, stands just behind where his tayle is — is 't not true, Poggio?

Pog. So the barber swore, forsooth.

Do. And you are running [t]hither?

Ber. I, forsooth, unkle.

Do. Wilt thou be a foole stil? Come, sir, you shall not goe. You have more mind of a puppet-play then on the businesse I told y'ee. Why, thou great baby, wu't never have wit? Wu't make thy selfe a May-game to all the world?

Pog. Answere for your selfe, maister.

Ber. Why, unkle, shu'd I sit at home still, and not goe abroad to see fashions like other gallants?

Do. To see hobby-horses! What wise talke,

I pray, had you with Annabella, when you were at Signior Florio's house?

Ber. Oh, the wench! Uds sa' me, unkle, I tickled her with a rare speech, that I made her almost burst her belly with laughing. 60

Do. Nay, I thinke so; and what speech was't?

Ber. What did I say, Poggio? 65

Pog. Forsooth, my maister said, that hee loved her almost as well as hee loved parmasent, and swore — I'le be sworne for him — that shee wanted but such a nose as his was, to be as pretty a young woeman as any was in Parma. 70

Do. Oh, grose!

Ber. Nay, unkle, — then shee ask't mee whether my father had any more children then my selfe; and I sayd "No, 'twere better hee should have had his braynes knockt out first." 75

Do. This is intolerable.

Ber. Then sayd shee, "Will Signior Donado, your unkle, leave you all his wealth?"

Do. Ha! that was good — did she harpe upon that string? 80

Ber. Did she harpe upon that string? I, that she did. I answered, "Leave me all his wealth? Why, woeman, hee hath no other wit; if hee had, he should heare on't to his everlasting glory and confusion. I know," quoth I, "I am his 85 white boy, and will not be guld." And with that she fell into a great smile, and went away. Nay, I did fit her!

Do. Ah, sirrah, then I see there is no changing of nature. Well, Bergetto, I feare thou wilt be 90 a very asse still.

Ber. I should be sorry for that, unkle.

Do. Come, come you home with me: since you are no better a speaker, I'le have you write to her after some courtly manner, and inclose 95 some rich jewell in the letter.

Ber. I, marry, that will be excellent.

Do. Peace, innocent!

Once in my time I'le set my wits to schoole;
If all faile, 'tis but the fortune of a foole. 100

Ber. Poggio, 'twill doe, Poggio. Exeunt.

Gio. Thou wilt chide me, then. 15
Kisse me — so! Thus hung Jove on Læda's necke,

And suck't divine ambrosia from her lips.
I envy not the mightiest man alive;
But hold my selfe, in being king of thee,
More great than were I king of all the world. 20
But I shall lose you, sweet-heart.

Anna. But you shall not!

Gio. You must be married, mistres.

Anna. Yes, to whom?

Gio. Some one must have you.

Anna. You must.

Gio. Nay, some other.

Anna. Now, prithe, do not speake so; without jesting
You'le make me weepe in earnest.

Gio. What, you will not! 25
But tell me, sweete, cans't thou be dar'd to swear

That thou wilt live to mee, and to no other?

Anna. By both our loves I dare; for didst thou know,
My Giovanni, how all suiters seeme
To my eyes hatefull, thou wouldst trust mee then. 30

22 You must be married, mistres. Q prints on line above.

22-3 Yes . . . have you. Q prints on one line.

23 You must. Gio. Nay, some other. Q prints on one line.

Gio. Enough, I take thy word. Sweet, we must part:

Remember what thou vow'st; keepe well my heart.

Anna. Will you begon?

Gio. I must.

Anna. When to returne?

Gio. Soone.

Anna. Looke you doe.

Gio. Farewell. Exit.

Anna. Goe where thou wilt, in mind I'le keepe thee here, 35

And where thou art, I know I shall be there.
Guardian!

Enter Putana.

Putana. Child, how is't, child? Well, thanke heaven, ha!

Anna. O guardian, what a paradise of joy Have I past over!

40

Put. Nay, what a paradise of joy have you past under! Why now I commend thee, chardge. Feare nothing, sweete-heart, what though hee be your brother: your brother's a man, I hope, and I say still, if a young wench 45 feele the fitt upon her, let her take any body — father or brother, all is one.

33-4 Will you begon? Gio. I must makes one line of Q; When to returne? Gio. Soone. another; and Looke you doe. Gio. Farewell. a third.

Anna. I would not have it knowne for all the world.

Put. Nor I, indeed, for the speech of the people; else 'twere nothing.

Florio (within). Daughter Annabella!

Anna. O mee! my father. — Here, sir! —
Reach my worke.

Flo. (within). What are you doing?

Anna. So, let him come now.

Enter Florio, Richardetto like a Doctor of Physicke, and Philotis with a lute in her hand.

Flo. So hard at worke! that's well; you lose no time

Looke, I have brought you company; here's one 55
A learned doctor, lately come from Padua,
Much skild in physicke; and, for that I see
You have of late beene sickly, I entreated
This reverent man to visit you some time.

Anna. Y'are very welcome, sir.

Richardetto. I thanke you, mistresse. 60

Loud fame in large report hath spoke your praise
Aswell for vertue as perfection:

For which I have beene bold to bring with mee
A kins-woeman of mine, a maide, for song
And musicke one perhaps will give content. 65

Please you to know her.

Anna. They are parts I love.

And shee for them most welcome.

Philotis. Thanke you, lady.

Flo. Sir, now you know my house, pray make not strange ;

And if you finde my daughter neede your art,
I'le be your pay-master.

Rich. Sir, what I am 70
Shee shall command.

Flo. You shall bind me to you.
Daughter, I must have conference with you
About some matters that concernes us both.
Good Maister Doctor, please you but walke in,
Wee'le crave a little of your cozens cunning: 75
I thinke my girle hath not quite forgot
To touch an instrument; she could have don't:
Wee'le heare them both.

Rich. I'le waite upon you, sir. Exeunt.

[SCENA SECUNDA.]

Enter Soranzo in his study reading a booke.

[Soranzo.] Loves measure is extreame, the comfort paine,

The life unrest, and the reward disdainie.

What's here? lookt o're again. 'Tis so; so writes
This smooth licentious poet in his rymes.

But, Sanazar, thou lyeest; for had thy bosome 5
Felt such oppression as is laid on mine,

70-1 Sir . . . command. Q prints as one line.

Thou wouldst have kist the rod that made the smart.

To worke, then, happy Muse, and contradict
What Sanazer hath in his envy writ.

Loves measure is the meane, sweet his annoyes, 10
His pleasures life, and his reward all joyes.

Had Annabella liv'd when Sanazar
Did in his briefe Encomium celebrate
Venice, that queene of citties, he had left That verse which gaind him such a summe of gold, 15

And for one onely looke from Annabell
Had writ of her and her diviner cheekes.

O, how my thoughts are—

Vasques (within). Pray, forbear; in rules of civility, let me give notice on't: I shall be tax't 20 of my neglect of duty and service.

Soran. What rude intrusion interrupts my peace?

Can I be no where private?

Vas. (within). Troth, you wrong your modesty.

Soran. What's the matter, Vasques? who is't?

Enter Hippolita and Vasques.

Hippolita.

'Tis I: 25

Doe you know mee now? Looke, perjurd man, on her

7 .the smart. G-D, the [e] smart.

13 Encomium. Q, Euconium.

Whom thou and thy distracted lust have wrong'd.
 Thy sensuall rage of blood hath made my youth
 A scorne to men and angels ; and shall I
 Be now a foyle to thy unsated change ? 30
 Thou knowst, false wanton, when my modest fame

Stood free from staine or scandall, all the charmes
 Of hell or sorcery could not prevaile
 Against the honour of my chaster bosome.
 Thyne eyes did pleade in teares, thy tongue in oathes, 35

Such and so many that a heart of steele
 Would have beene wrought to pitty, as was mine :
 And shall the conquest of my lawfull bed,
 My husbands death, urg'd on by his disgrace,
 My losse of woeman-hood, be ill rewarded 40
 With hatred and contempt ? No ; know, Soranzo,
 I have a spirit doth as much distast
 The slavery of fearing thee, as thou
 Dost loath the memory of what hath past.

Soran. Nay, deare Hippolita, —

Hip. Call me not deare, 45
 Nor thinke with supple words to smooth the grosenesse

Of my abuses. 'Tis not your new mistresse,
 Your goodly Madam Merchant, shall triumph
 On my dejection ; tell her thus from mee,
 My byrth was nobler and by much more free. 50

Soran. You are too violent.

Hip. You are too double
In your dissimulation. See'st thou this,
This habit, these blacke mourning weedes of care?

'Tis thou art cause of this, and hast divorc't
My husband from his life, and me from him, 55
And made me widdow in my widdow-hood.

Soran. Will you yet heare?

Hip. More of the perjuries?
Thy soule is drown'd too deeply in those sinnes;

Thou needs't not add to th' number.

Soran. Then I'le leave you.
You are past all rules of sence.

Hip. And thou of grace. 60

Vasques. Fy, mistresse, you are not neere the limits of reason: if my lord had a resolution as noble as vertue it selfe, you take the course to unedge it all. Sir, I beseech you, doe not perplexe her; griefes, alas, will have a vent: I dare 65 undertake Madam Hippolita will now freely heare you.

Soran. Talke to a woman frantick! — Are these the fruits of your love?

Hip. They are the fruites of thy untruth, false man!

70

Didst thou not sweare, whil'st yet my husband
liv'd,

That thou wouldst wish no happinesse on earth
More then to call me wife? Didst thou not vow

When hee should dye to marry mee? — for which

The devill in my blood, and thy protests,

75

Caus'd mee to counsaile him to undertake

A voyage to Ligorne, for that we heard

His brother there was dead and left a daughter

Young and unfriended, who, with much adoe,

I wish't him to bring hither. He did so,

80

And went; and, as thou know'st, dyed on the way.

Unhappy man, to buy his death so deare,

With my advice! Yet thou, for whom I did it,

Forget'st thy vowes, and leav'st me to my shame.

Soran. Who could helpe this?

Hip. Who! perjur'd man, thou couldst, 85

If thou hadst faith or love.

Soran.

You are deceiv'd:

The vowes I made, if you remember well,

Were wicked and unlawfull; 'twere more sinne

To keepe them then to breake them: as for mee

I cannot maske my penitence. Thinke thou

90

How much thou hast digrest from honest shame

In bringing of a gentleman to death

Who was thy husband; such a one as hee,

So noble in his quality, condition,

Learning, behaviour, entertainment, love, 95
As Parma could not shew a braver man.

Vas. You doe not well; this was not your promise.

Soran. I care not; let her know her mon-struous life.

Ere I'le be servile to so blacke a sinne,
I'le be a curse. Woeman, come here no more; 100
Learne to repent and dye; for, by my honour,
I hate thee and thy lust: you have beene too
foule. [Exit.]

Vas. This part has beene scurvily playd.

Hip. How foolishly this beast contemnes his fate,

And shuns the use of that which I more scorne 105
Then I once lov'd, his love! But let him goe;
My vengeance shall give comfort to his woe.

She offers to goe away.

Vas. Mistresse, Mistresse, Madam Hippolita!
pray, a word or two.

Hip. With mee, sir? 110

Vas. With you, if you please.

Hip. What is't?

Vas. I know you are infinitely mov'd now, and you thinke you have cause: some I confesse
you have, but sure not so much as you imagine. 115

Hip. Indeed!

Vas. O you were miserably bitter, which you followed even to the last sillable. Faith, you were somewhat too shrewd; by my life, you could not have tooke my lord in a worse time ¹²⁰ since I first knew h^m; to morrow you shall finde him a new man.

Hip. Well, I shall waite his leasure.

Vas. Fie, this is not a hearty patience; it comes sowerly from you: troth, let me perswade ¹²⁵ you for once.

Hip. [aside]. I have it, and it shall be so; thanks, opportunity! — Perswade me to what?

Vas. Visitt him in some milder temper. O, if you could but master a little your femall spleen, ¹³⁰ how might you winne him!

Hip. Hee wil never love me. Vasques, thou hast bin a too trusty servant to such a master, and I beleeve thy reward in the end wil fal [1] out like mine. 135

Vas. So, perhaps, too.

Hip. Resolve thy selfe it will. Had I one so true, so truely honest, so secret to my counsels, as thou hast beene to him and his, I should thinke it a slight acquittance, not onely to make ¹⁴⁰ him maister of all I have, but even of my selfe.

Vas. O, you are a noble gentlewoman.

Hip. Wu't thou feede alwayes upon hopes? Well, I know thou art wise, and see'st the reward of an old servant daily, what it is. 145

Vas. Beggery and neglect.

Hip. True; but, Vasques, wer't thou mine, and wouldst bee private to me and my designes,
I here protest my selfe and all what I can else
call myne should be at thy dispose. 150

Vas. [aside]. Worke you that way, old moule?
then I have the wind of you.—I were not worthy of it by any desert that could lye—within my compasse; if I could —

Hip. What then? 155

Vas. I should then hope to live in these my old yeares with rest and security.

Hip. Give me thy hand: now promise but thy silence,
And helpe to bring to passe a plot I have,
And here in sight of heaven, that being done, 160
I make thee lord of mee and mine estate.

Vas. Come, you are merry; this is such a happinesse that I can neither thinke or beleeve.

Hip. Promise thy secresie, and 'tis confirm'd.

Vas. Then here I call our good genii for wit-165 nesses, whatsoever your designes are, or against whomsoever, I will not onely be a speciall actor therein, but never disclose it till it be effected.

Hip. I take thy word, and, with that, thee for mine;
Come, then, let's more conferre of this anon. 170

165-6 for witnesses. So G-D. Q, foe-witnesses.

On this delicious bane my thoughts shall banquet;
 Revenge shall sweeten what my griefes have tasted.

Exeunt.

[SCENA TERTIA.]

[The street.]

Enter Richardetto and Philotis.

Richardetto. Thou see'st, my lovely neece,
 these strange mishaps,
 How all my fortunes turne to my disgrace,
 Wherein I am but as a looker on Whiles others act my shame, and I am silent.

Philotis. But, unkle, wherein can this borrowed shape
 Give you content?

5

Rich. I'le tell thee, gentle neece:
 Thy wanton aunt in her lascivious riotts
 Lives now secure, thinkes I am surely dead
 In my late journey to Ligorne for you, —
 As I have caus'd it to be rumord out, —
 Now would I see with what an impudence
 Shee gives scope to her loose adultery,
 And how the common voyce allowes hereof:
 Thus farre I have prevail'd.

10

Phil. Alas, I feare
 You meane some strange revenge.

Rich. O, be not troubled; 15
Your ignorance shall pleade for you in all:
But to our businesse. What! you learnt for certaine

How Signior Florio meanes to give his daughter
In marriage to Soranzo?

Phil. Yes, for certaine.

Rich. But how finde you young Annabella's love 20

Inclind to him?

Phil. For ought I could perceive,
She neyther fancies him or any else.

Rich. There's mystery in that which time must shew.

Shee us'd you kindly?

Phil. Yes.

Rich. And crav'd your company?

Phil. Often.

Rich. 'T is well; it goes as I could wish. 25
I am the doctor now; and as for you,
None knowes you; if all faile not, we shall thrive.

(Enter Grimaldi.)

But who comes here? I know him; 'tis Grimaldi,
A Roman and a souldier, neere allyed
Unto the Duke of Montferrato, one 30
Attending on the nuntio of the pope

24-5 Shee us'd . . . could wish. Q does not observe verse arrangement.

That now resides in Parma; by which meanes
He hopes to get the love of Annabella.

Grimaldi. Save you, sir.

Rich. And you, sir.

Gri. I have heard
Of your approv'd skill, which through the city

35

Is freely talkt of, and would crave your ayd.

Rich. For what, sir?

Gri. Marry, sir, for this —
But I would speake in private.

Rich. Leave us, cozen.

Exit Phi.

Gri. I love faire Annabella, and would know 40
Whether in arts there may not be receipts
To move affection.

Rich. Sir, perhaps there may;
But these will nothing profit you.

Gri. Not mee?

Rich. Unlesse I be mistooke, you are a man
Greatly in favour with the cardinall. 45

Gri. What of that?

Rich. In duty to his grace,
I will be bold to tell you, if you seeke
To marry Florio's daughter, you must first Remove a barre twixt you and her.

Gri. Whose that?

Rich. Soranzo is the man that hath her heart; 50
And while hee lives, be sure you cannot speed.

Gri. Soranzo! what, mine enemy! is't hee?

Rich. Is hee your enemy?

Gri. The man I hate
Worse then confusion; I'le tell him streight.

Rich. Nay, then, take mine advice, 55
Even for his graces sake, the cardinall:
I'le finde a time when hee and shee doe meete,
Of which I'le give you notice; and, to be sure
Hee shall not scape you, I'le provide a poyson
To dip your rapiers poynt in: if hee had 60
As many heads as Hidra had, he dyes.

Gri. But shall I trust thee, doctor?

Rich. As your selfe;
Doubt not in ought; thus shall the fates decree,
By me Soranzo falls, that ruin'd mee.

Exeunt.

[SCENA QUARTA — Another part of the street.]

Enter Donado, Bergetto and Poggio.

Donado. Well, sir, I must bee content to be both your secretary and your messenger my selfe.
I cannot tell what this letter may worke; but,
as sure as I am alive, if thou come once to talke

54 tell. G suggests to.

64 ruip'd. So G-D. Q, min'd.

with her, I feare thou wu't marre whatsoever I 5 make.

Bergetto. You make, unkle? Why am not I bigge enough to carry mine owne letter, I pray?

Do. I, I, carry a fooles head o' thy owne!
Why, thou dunce, wouldst thou write a letter, 10
and carry it thy selfe?

Ber. Yes, that I wudd, and reade it to her with my owne mouth; for you must thinke, if shee will not beleeve me my selfe when she heares me speake, she will not beleeve anothers 15 handwriting. O, you thinke I am a blocke-head, unkle. No, sir. Poggio knowes I have in-dited a letter my selfe; so I have.

Poggio. Yes, truely, sir; I have it my pocket.

Do. A sweete one, no doubt; pray, let's see't. 20

Ber. I cannot reade my owne hand very well,
Poggio; reade it, Poggio.

Do. Begin.

Poggio reads.

Pog. Most dainty and honey-sweete Mistresse:
I could call you faire, and lie as fast as any that 25 loves you; but my unkle being the elder man, I leave it to him, as more fit for his age and the colour of his beard. I am wise enough to tell you I can board where I see occasion; or if you like my unkles wit better then mine, you shall marry mee; if you like 30 mine better then his, I will marry you in spight of your teeth. So, commending my best parts to you, I rest

Yours upwards and downewards, or you may chose, 35
Bergetto.

Ber. Ah, ha! here's stufte, unkle!

Do. Here's stufte indeed to shame us all.
Pray, whose advice did you take in this learned letter? 40

Pog. None, upon my word, but mine owne.

Ber. And mine, unkle, beleeve it, no bodies else; 'twas mine owne brayne, I thanke a good wit for't.

Do. Get you home, sir, and looke you keepe 45 within doores till I returne.

Ber. How! that were a jest indeede; I scorne it, yfaith.

Do. What! you doe not?

Ber. Judge me, but I doe now. 50

Pog. Indeede, sir, 'tis very unhealthy.

Do. Well, sir, if I heare any of your apish running to motions and fopperies till I come backe, you were as good no; looke too't.

Exit Do.

Ber. Poggio, shall 's steale to see this horse 55 with the head in's tayle?

Pog. I, but you must take heede of whipping.

Ber. Dost take me for a child, Poggio?
Come, honest Poggio. Exeunt.

[SCENA QUINTA — Friar Bonaventura's cell.]

Enter Fryar and Giovanni.

Fryar. Peace, thou hast told a tale whose every word

Threatens eternall slaughter to the soule :
I'me sorry I have heard it ; would mine eares
Had beene one minute deafe, before the houre
That thou cam'st to mee ! O young man cast-away,

By the relligious number of mine order, 5
I day and night have wak't my aged eyes
Above thy strength, to weepe on thy behalfe ;
But Heaven is angry, and be thou resolv'd
Thou art a man remark't to tast a mischief. 10
Looke for't ; though it come late, it will come sure.

Giovanni. Father, in this you are uncharitable ;
What I have done I'le prove both fit and good.
It is a principall, which you have taught
When I was yet your scholler, that the f[r]ame 15
And composition of the minde doth follow
The frame and composition of body :
So, where the bodies furniture is beauty,

6 number. G suggests founder.

8 thy. G, my.

15 f[r]ame. Corrected by G.

17 of body. G-D supplies [the] before body.

The mindes must needs be vertue; which allowed,
 Vertue it selfe is reason but refin'd, 20
 And love the quintessence of that: this proves
 My sisters beauty being rarely faire
 Is rarely vertuous; chiefly in her love,
 And chiefly in that love, her love to me.
 If hers to me, then so is mine to her; 25
 Since in like causes are effects alike.

Fry. O ignorance in knowledge! Long agoe,
 How often have I warn'd thee this before!
 Indeede, if we were sure there were no deity,
 Nor heaven nor hell, then to be lead alone 30
 By natures light — as were philosophers
 Of elder times — might instance some defence.
 But 'tis not so; then, madman, thou wilt finde
 That nature is in heavens positions blind.

Gio. Your age o're rules you; had you youth like mine, 35
 You'd make her love your heaven, and her divine.

Fry. Nay, then I see th' art too farre sold to hell:
 It lies not in the compasse of my prayers
 To call thee backe; yet let me counsell thee:
 Perswade thy sister to some marriage. 40

Gio. Marriage! why, that's to dambe her;
 that's to prove
 Her greedy of variety of lust.

Fry. O fearefull ! if thou wilt not, give me leave

To shrive her, lest shee should dye un-absolv'd.

Gio. At your best leasure, father : then shee'le tell you

45

How dearly shee doth prize my matchlesse love ;
Then you will know what pittie 'twere we two
Should have beene sundred from each others armes.

View well her face, and in that little round

You may observe a world of variety ;

50

For colour, lips ; for sweet perfumes, her breath ;

For jewels, eyes ; for threds of purest gold,

Hayre ; for delicious choyce of flowers, cheekes ;

Wonder in every portion of that throne.

Heare her but speake, and you will swear the sphæres

55

Make musicke to the cittizens in heaven.

But, father, what is else for pleasure fram'd,

Least I offend your eares, shall goe un-nam'd.

Fry. The more I heare, I pittie thee the more,

That one so excellent should give those parts

60

All to a second death. What I can doe

Is but to pray ; and yet I could advise thee,

Wouldst thou be rul'd.

Gio. In what ?

Fry. Why, leave her yet :

50 world of variety. G-D, world's variety.

The throne of mercy is above your trespass; —
 Yet time is left you both —

Gio. To embrace each other. 65
 Else let all time be strucke quite out of number:
 She is like mee, and I like her, resolv'd.

Fry. No more! I'll visit her; this grieves me most,
 Things being thus, a paire of soules are lost.
Exeunt.

[SCENA SEXTA. A room in Florio's house.]

Enter Florio, Donado, Annabella, Putana.

Florio. Where's Giovanni?

Annabella. Newly walk't abroad,
 And, as I heard him say, gon to the fryar,
 His reverent tutor.

Flo. That's a blessed man,
 A man made up of holinesse: I hope
 Hee'll teach him how to gaine another world. 5

Donado. Faire gentlewoman, here's a letter sent
 To you from my young cozen; I dare sweare
 He loves you in his soule: would you could heare

Sometimes what I see dayly, sighes and teares,
 As if his breast were prison to his heart. 10

Flo. Receive it, Annabella.

Anna. Alas, good man!

Do. What's that she said?

Putana. And please you, sir, she sayd, "Alas, good man!" Truly I doe commend him to her 15 every night before her first sleepe, because I would have her dreame of him; and shee hark-ens to that most relligiously.

Do. Say'st so? Godamercy, Putana, there's something for thee; and prythee doe what thou 20 canst on his behalfe; sha' not be lost labour, take my word for't.

Put. Thanke you most heartily, sir; now I have a feeling of your mind, let mee alone to worke. 25

Anna. Guardian!

Put. Did you call?

Anna. Keepe this letter.

Do. Signior Florio, in any case bid her reade
it instantly. 30

Flo. Keepe it for what? pray, reade it mee here right.

Anna. I shall, sir. She reades.

Do. How d'ee finde her inclin'd, signior?

Flo. Troth, sir, I know not how; not all so well 35

As I could wish.

Anna. Sir, I am bound to rest your cozens debter.

21 Sha' G-D, 'shall.

31 Keepe it for what? G-D, Keep it! for what?

The jewell I'le returne; for if he love,
I'le count that love a jewell.

Do. Marke you that? —
Nay, keepe them both, sweete maide.

Anna. You must excuse mee. 40
Indeed I will not keepe it.

Flo. Where's the ring
That which your mother in her will bequeath'd,
And charg'd you on her blessing not to give't
To any but your husband? Send backe that.

Anna. I have it not.

Flo. Ha! have it not! where is't? 45

Anna. My brother in the morning tooke it
from me,
Said he would weare't to day.

Flo. Well, what doe you say
To young Bergetto's love? Are you content
To match with him? Speake.

Do. There's the poynt, indeed.

Anna [aside]. What shal I doe? I must say something now. 50

Flo. What say? Why d'ee not speake?

Anna. Sir, with your leave,
Please you to give me freedome?

Flo. Yes, you have.

Anna. Signior Donado, if your nephew meane
To rayse his better fortunes in his match,

52 Yes, you have. G-D supplies "it" after "have."

The hope of mee will hinder such a hope :
 Sir, if you love him, as I know you doe, 55
 Find one more worthy of his choyce then mee.
 In short, I'me sure, I sha' not be his wife.

Do. Why, here's plaine dealing ; I commend thee for't ;
 And all the worst I wish thee, is heaven blesse
 thee !

Your father yet and I will still be friends — 60
 Shall we not, Signior Florio ?

Flo. Yes, why not ?
 Looke, here your cozen comes.

Enter Bergetto and Poggio.

Do. [aside]. Oh, coxcombe ! what doth he make here ?

Bergetto. Where's my unkle, sirs ? 65

Do. What's the newes now ?

Ber. Save you, unkle, save you ! You must not thinke I come for nothing, maisters. And how, and how is't ? What, you have read my letter ? Ah, there I — tickled you, yfaith. 70

Poggio [aside to Ber.]. But 'twere better you had tickled her in another place.

Ber. Sirrah sweet-heart, I'le tell thee a good jest ; and riddle what 'tis.

Anna. You say you'd tell mee. 75

75 you'd. G-D, you'll.

Ber. As I was walking just now in the streete, I mett a swaggering fellow would needs take the wall of me; and because hee did thrust me, I very valiantly cal'd him rogue. Hee hereupon bad me drawe; I told him I had more wit then 80 so: but when hee saw that I would not, hee did so maule me with the hilts of his rapier that my head sung whil'st my feete caper'd in the kennell.

Do. Was ever the like asse seene? 85

Anna. And what did you all this while?

Ber. Laugh at him for a gull, till I see the blood runne about mine eares, and then I could not choose but finde in my heart to cry; till a fellow with a broad beard — they say hee is a 90 new-come doctor — cald mee into his house, and gave me a playster; looke you, here 'tis; and, sir, there was a young wench washt my face and hands most excellently; yfaith, I shall love her as long as I live for't, — did she not, Poggio? 95

Pog. Yes, and kist him too.

Ber. Why, la, now, you thinke I tell a lye, unkle, I warrant.

Do. Would hee that beate thy blood out of thy head had beaten some wit into it; for I feare 100 thou never wilt have any.

Ber. Oh, unkle, but there was a wench would 87 see. G-D, saw.

91 his. So G-D. Q, this.

have done a mans heart good to have lookt on her; by this light, shee had a face mee-thinks worth twenty of you, Mistresse Annabella. 105

Do. Was ever such a foole borne?

Anna. I am glad shee lik't you, sir.

Ber. Are you so? By my troth, I thanke you, forsooth.

Flo. Sure, 'twas the doctors neece, that was 110 last day with us here.

Ber. 'Twas shee! 'Twas shee!

Do. How doe you know that, simplicity?

Ber. Why doe's not hee say so? If I should have sayd no, I should have given him the lye, 115 unkle, and so have deserv'd a dry beating again: I'le none of that.

Flo. A very modest welbehav'd young maide As I have seene.

Do. Is shee indeed?

Flo. Indeed

Shee is, if I have any judgement. 120

Do. Well, sir, now you are free; you need not care for sending letters. Now you are dismiss; your mistresse here will none of you.

Ber. No! why what care I for that? I can have wenches enough in Parma for halfe a crowne 125 a peece — cannot I, Poggio?

118-9 A very . . . have seene. Q prints on one line.

119-20 Indeed shee is . . . judgement. G-D prints on one line. Q, as here.

Pog. I'le warrant you, sir.

Do. Signior Florio,

I thanke you for your free recourse you gave
For my admittance; and to you, faire maide, 130
That jewell I will give you 'gainst your marriage.

Come, will you goe, sir?

Ber. I, marry, will I. Mistres, farwell, mis-tres; I'le come againe to morrow—farwell, mistres.

Exit Do., Ber. & Pog. 135

Enter Gio.

Flo. Sonne, where have you beene? What, alone, alone, still, still?

I would not have it so; you must forsake
This over bookish humour. Well, your sister
Hath shooke the foole off.

Giovanni. 'Twas no match for her.

Flo. 'Twas not indeed; I ment it nothing
lesse; 140

Soranzo is the man I onely like.

Looke on him, Annabella.—Come, 'tis supper-time,

And it growes late.

Exit Florio.

Gio. Whose jewell's that?

Anna. Some sweet-hearts.

Gio. So I thinke.

128-32 Q prints as prose.

136-9 Sonne . . . off. Q prints as prose.

136 still. G-D omits second still.

Anna. A lusty youth, 145
Signior Donado, gave it me to weare
Against my marriage.

Gio. But you shall not weare it;
Send it him backe againe.

Anna. What, you are jealous?

Gio. That you shall know anon, at better leasure,

Welcome sweete night! the evening crownes
the day.

Exeunt. 150

145-8 A lusty . . . gave it me. Q prints as one line; to weare
. . . marriage, the next; but you . . . againe, the next; What
. . . jealous?, the last.

ACTUS TERTIUS.

[SCENA PRIMA. A room in Donado's house.]

Enter Bergetto and Poggio.

Bergetto. Do'es my unkle thinke to make mee a baby still? No, Poggio, he shall know I have a skonce now.

Poggio. I, let him not bobbe you off like an ape with an apple. 5

Ber. 'Sfoot, I will have the wench, if he were tenne unkles, in despight of his nose, Poggio.

Pog. Hold him to the grynd-stone, and give not a jot of ground; shee hath in a manner promised you already. 10

[Ber.] True, Poggio, and her unkle, the doctor, swore I should marry her.

Pog. He swore, I remember.

Ber. And I will have her, that's more. Did'st see the codpeice-poynt she gave me, and the 15 box of mermalade?

Pog. Very well; and kist you, that my chopps watred at the sight on't. There's no way but to clap up a marriage in hugger mugger.

Ber. I will do't; for I tell thee, Poggio, I 20

11-12 True . . . her. Q gives this to Poggio.

begin to grow valiant, methinkes, and my courage begins to rise.

Pog. Should you be afraid of your unkle?

Ber. Hang him, old doating rascall! no, I say I will have her.

25

Pog. Lose no time, then.

Ber. I will beget a race of wise men and constables that shall cart whoores at their owne charges; and breake the dukes peace ere I have done my selfe. Come away.

Exeunt. 30

[SCENA SECUNDA. A room in Florio's house.]

Enter Florio, Giovanni, Soranzo, Annabella, Putana and Vasques.

Florio. My Lord Soranzo, though I must confesse

The proffers that are made me have beene great
In marriage of my daughter, yet the hope
Of your still rising honours have prevaïld
Above all other joynctures: here shee is;
She knowes my minde; speake for your selfe to her.

5

And heare you, daughter, see you use him nobly.
For any private speech I'le give you time.
Come, sonne, and you the rest; let them alone;
Agree as they may.

10 Agree. G-D inserts a second they after agree.

Soranzo. I thanke you, sir. 10

Giovanni [aside to Anna]. Sister, be not all woeman; thinke on me.

Soran. Vasques!

Vasques. My lord.

Soran. Attend me without.

Exeunt omnes; manet Soran. & Anna.

Annabella. Sir, what's your will with me?

Soran. Doe you not know

What I should tell you?

Anna. Yes, you'le say you love mee.

Soran. And I'le sweare it too; will you be-leeve it? 15

Anna. 'Tis not poynt of faith.

Enter Giovanni above.

Soran. Have you not will to love?

Anna. Not you.

Soran. Whom then?

Anna. That's as the fates inferre.

Gio. [aside]. Of those I'me regient now.

Soran. What meane you, sweete?

Anna. To live and dye a maide.

Soran. Oh, that's unfit.

Gio. [aside]. Here's one can say that's but a womans noate. 20

Soran. Did you but see my heart, then would you sweare —

13-14 Doe . . . tell you? Q prints as one line.

16 'Tis not. G-D, 'Tis no.

Anna. That you were dead!

Gio. [aside]. That's true, or somewhat neere it.

Soran. See you these true loves teares ?

Anna. No.

Gio. [aside]. Now shee winkes.

Soran. They plead to you for grace.

Anna. Yet nothing speake.

Soran. Oh, grant my suite.

Anna. What is 't ?

Soran. To let mee live — 25

Anna. Take it.

Soran. Still yours.

Anna. That is not mine to give.

Gio. [aside]. One such another word would kil his hopes.

Soran. Mistres, to leave those fruitlesse strifes of wit,

I know I have lov'd you long, and lov'd you truely :

Not hope of what you have, but what you are, 30

Have drawne me on ; then let mee not in vaine

Still feele the rigour of your chast disdain.

I'me sicke, and sicke to th' heart.

Anna. Helpe ! aquavitae !

Soran. What meane you ?

Anna. Why, I thought you had beene sicke.

Soran. Doe you mocke my love?

Gio. [aside]. There, sir, shee was too nimble.

35

Soran. [aside]. 'Tis plaine; shee laughes at me. — These scornefull taunts

Neither become your modesty or yeares.

Anna. You are no looking-glasse; or if you were,

I'de dresse my language by you.

Gio. [aside]. I'me confirm'd.

Anna. To put you out of doubt, my lord, mee-thinks 40

Your common sence should make you understand

That if I lov'd you, or desir'd your love,

Some way I should have given you better tast:

But since you are a noble man, and one

I would not wish should spend his youth in hopes,

45

Let mee advise you here to forbear your suite,

And thinke I wish you well, I tell you this.

Soran. Is't you speake this?

Anna. Yes, I my selfe; yet know, —

Thus farre I give you comfort, — if mine eyes

Could have pickt out a man, amongst all those 50

That sue'd to mee, to make a husband of,

36-47 'Tis plaine . . . tell you this. Q prints as prose.

46 here. G-D omits here.

You should have beene that man: let this suffice.
Be noble in your secresie and wise.

Gio. [aside]. Why, now I see shee loves me.

Anna. One word more.

As ever vertue liv'd within your mind, 55
As ever noble courses were your guide,
As ever you would have me know you lov'd
me,

Let not my father know hereof by you:
If I hereafter finde that I must marry,
It shall be you or none.

Soran. I take that promise. 60

Anna. Oh, oh, my head!

Soran. What's the matter? not well?

Anna. Oh, I begin to sicken!

Gio. [aside]. Heaven forbid!

Exit from above.

Soran. Helpe, helpe, within there, ho!

Looke to your daughter, Signior Florio. 65

[Re-]enter Florio, Giovanni, Putana.

Flo. Hold her up; shee sounes.

Gio. Sister, how d'ee?

Anna. Sicke, brother, are you there?

Flo. Convey her to her bed instantly, whil'st
I send for a phisitian; quickly, I say.

Putana. Alas, poore child! 70

Exeunt; manet Soranzo.

65 Looke . . . Florio. Q gives this to Giovanni.

[Re-]enter Vasques.

Vas. My lord.

Soran. Oh, Vasques, now I doubly am undone
Both in my present and my future hopes :
Shee plainely told me that shee could not love,
And thereupon soone sickned, and I fear 75
Her life's in danger.

Vas. [aside]. Byr lady, sir, and so is yours, if you knew all.—'Las, sir, I am sorry for that :
may bee 'tis but the maides-sickness, an over-fluxe of youth ; and then, sir, there is no such 80 present remedy as present marriage. But hath shee given you an absolute deniall ?

Soran. She hath and she hath not ; I'me full of grieffe ;
But what she sayd I'le tell thee as we goe.

Exeunt.

[SCENA TERTIA. A room in Florio's house.]

Enter Giovanni and Putana

Putana. Oh, sir, wee are all undone, quite undone, utterly undone, and sham'd forever !
Your sister, oh, your sister !

Giovanni. What of her ? For heavens sake, speake ; how do'es she ? 5

Put. Oh, that ever I was borne to see this day !

Gio. She is not dead, ha? is shee?

Put. Dead? no, shee is quicke; 'tis worse, she is with childe. You know what you have 10 done; heaven forgive 'ee! 'Tis too late to repent, now heaven helpe us!

Gio. With child? how dost thou know't?

Put. How doe I know't! am I at these yeeres ignorant what the meaning's of quames and 15 waterpangs be? of changing of colours, quezinesse of stomacks, pukings, and another thing that I could name? Doe not, for her and your credits sake, spend the time in asking how, and which way, 'tis so: shee is quick, upon my 20 word: if you let a phisitian see her water, y'are undone.

Gio. But in what case is shee?

Put. Prettily amended: 'twas but a fit, which I soone espi'd, and she must looke for often 25 hence-forward.

Gio. Commend me to her, bid her take no
care;

Let not the doctor visit her, I charge you:
Make some excuse till I returne. — Oh, mee!
I have a world of businesse in my head. — 30
Doe not discomfort her.

12 G-D puts the comma after now. Q, as here.

31-3 Doe not . . . well. Arrangement of G-D. Q makes but two lines, beginning the second with If my father.

How doe this newes perplex mee ! — If my father
Come to her, tell him shee's recover'd well ;
Say 'twas but some ill dyet ; d'ee heare, woeman ?
Looke you to't.

Put. I will sir.

Exeunt.

35

[SCENA QUARTA. A room in Florio's house.]

Enter Florio and Richardetto.

Florio. And how d'ee finde her, sir ?

Richardetto. Indifferent well ;

I see no danger, scarce perceivè shee's sicke,
But that shee told mee shee had lately eaten
Mellownes, and, as shee thought, those disagreed

With her young stomacke.

Flo. Did you give her ought ? 5

Rich. An easie surfeit water, nothing else.

You neede not doubt her health : I rather thinke
Her sicknesse is a fulnesse of her blood, —
You understand mee ?

Flo. I doe ; you counsell well ;

And once, within these few dayes, will so order't 10
She shall be married ere shee know the time.

Rich. Yet let not hast, sir, make unworthy choice ;

That were dishonour.

Flo. Maister Doctor, no ;

I will not doe so neither : in plaine words,
My Lord Soranzo is the man I meane. 15

Rich. A noble and a vertuous gentleman.

Flo. As any is in Parma. Not farre hence
Dwels Father Bonaventure, a grave fryar,
Once tutor to my sonne : now at his cell
P'le have 'em married.

Rich. You have plotted wisely. 20

Flo. P'le send one straight to speake with him to night.

Rich. Soranzo's wise ; he will delay no time.

Flo. It shall be so.

Enter Fryar and Giovanni.

Fryar. Good peace be here and love !

Flo. Welcome, relligious fryar ; you are one
That still bring blessing to the place you come
to. 25

Giovanni. Sir, with what speed I could, I did my best
To draw this holy man from forth his cell
To visit my sicke sister ; that with words
Of ghostly comfort in this time of neede
Hee might absolve her, whether she live or die. 30

Flo. 'Twas well done, Giovanni ; thou herein
Hast shewed a Christians care, a brothers love.
Come, father, P'le conduct you to her chamber,
And one thing would intreat you.

Fry. Say on, sir.

Flo. I have a fathers deare impression, 35
 And wish before I fall into my grave
 That I might see her married, as 'tis fit :
 A word from you, grave man, will winne her more
 Then all our best perswasions.

Fry. Gentle sir,
 All this I'le say, that heaven may prosper her. 40
Exeunt.

[SCENA QUINTA. A room in Richardetto's house.]

Enter Grimaldi.

Grimaldi. Now if the doctor keepe his word,
 Soranzo,
 Twenty to one you misse your bride. I know
 'Tis an unnoble act, and not becomes
 A souldiers vallour; but in termes of love,
 Where merite cannot sway, policy must. 5
 I am resolv'd; if this phisitian
 Play not on both hands, then Soranzo falls.

Enter Richardetto.

Richardetto. You are come as I could wish;
 this very night
 Soranzo, 'tis ordain'd, must bee affied

8-11 You are . . . married. Q prints as prose.

To Annabella, and, for ought I know,
Married. 10

Gri. How!

Rich. Yet your patience: —
The place, 'tis Fryar Bonaventures cell.
Now I would wish you to bestow this night
In watching thereabouts; 'tis but a night:
If you misse now, to morrow I'le know all. 15

Gri. Have you the poyson?

Rich. Here, 'tis in this box:
Doubt nothing, this will doe't; in any case,
As you respect your life, be quicke and sure.

Gri. I'le speede him.

Rich. Doe. Away! for 'tis not safe
You should be seene much here. Ever my love! 20

Gri. And mine to you. Exit Gri.

Rich. So! if this hitt, I'le laugh and hug revenge;

And they that now dreame of a wedding-feast
May chance to mourne the lusty bridegromes ruine.

But to my other businesse. Neice Philotis! 25

Enter Philotis.

Philotis. Unkle.

Rich. My lovely neece,
You have bethought 'ee?

Phi. Yes, and, as you counsel'd,

Fashion'd my heart to love him, but hee sweares
 Hee will to night be married; for he feares 30
 His unkle else, if hee should know the drift,
 Will hinder all, and call his couze to shrift.

Rich. To night? why, best of all; but let mee see—

I—ha!—yes,—so it shall be; in disguise
 Wee'le earely to the fryars; I have thought on't. 35

Enter Bergetto and Poggio.

Phi. Unkle, hee comes.

Rich. Welcome, my worthy couze.

Bergetto. Lasse, pretty lasse, come busse, lasse! Aha, Poggio!

[Rich.] [aside]. There's hope of this yet.
 You shall have time enough; withdraw a little;
 Wee must conferre at large.

Ber. Have you not sweete-meates or dainty devices for me? 40

Phi. You shall enough, sweet-heart.

Ber. Sweet-heart! marke that, Poggio. By my troth, I cannot choose but kisse thee once more for that word "sweet-heart." Poggio, I have a monstrous swelling about my stomacke, 45 whatsoever the matter be.

Poggio. You shall have phisick for't, sir.

Rich. Time runs apace.

Ber. Time's a blockhead.

38 There's . . . yet. So G-D. Q gives this to Philotis.

Rich. Be rul'd : when wee have done what's fitt to doe, 50
Then you may kisse your fill, and bed her too.
Exeunt.

[SCENA SEXTA. Annabella's chamber.]

Enter the fryar sitting in a chayre ; Annabella kneeling and whispering to him ; a table before them and wax-lights. She weepes and wrings her hands.

Fryar. I am glad to see this pennance ; for,
beleeve me,
You have unript a soule so foule and guilty,
As, I must tell you true, I marvaile how
The earth hath borne you up : but weepe, weepe on ;
These teares may doe you good ; weepe faster
yet, 5
Whiles I doe reade a lecture.

Annabella. Wretched creature !

Fry. I, you are wretched, miserably wretched,
Almost condemn'd alive. There is a place,—
List, daughter,— in a blacke and hollow vault,
Where day is never seene ; there shines no
sunne, 10
But flaming horror of consuming fires,

Enter the fryar. Q adds in his study ; this is clearly a mistake and is corrected in G-D.

A lightlesse sulphure, choakt with smoaky foggs
 Of an infected darknesse ; in this place
 Dwell many thousand thousand sundry sorts
 Of never dying deaths ; there damned soules 15
 Roare without pittie ; there are gluttons fedd
 With toades and addars ; there is burning oyle
 Powr'd downe the drunkards throate ; the usurer
 Is forc't to suppe whole draughts of molten gold ;
 There is the murtherer for-ever stab'd, 20
 Yet can he never dye ; there lies the wanton
 On racks of burning steele, whiles in his soule
 Hee feeles the torment of his raging lust.

Anna. Mercy ! Oh, mercy !

Fry. There stands these wretched things
 Who have dream't out whole yeeres in lawlesse sheets 25

And secret incests, cursing one another ;
 Then you will wish each kisse your brother gave
 Had been a daggers poynt ; then you shall heare
 How hee will cry, “ Oh, would my wicked sister Had first beene damn'd, when shee did yeeld to lust ! ” — 30

But soft, methinkes I see repentance worke
 New motions in your heart : say, how is't with you ?

Anna. Is there no way left to redeeme my miseries ?

Fry. There is, despaire not; heaven is merci-full

And offers grace even now. 'Tis thus agreed: 35
First, for your honours safety that you marry
The Lord Soranzo; next, to save your soule,
Leave off this life, and henceforth live to him.

Anna. Ay mee!

Fry. Sigh not; I know the baytes of sinne
Are hard to leave; oh, 'tis a death to doe't: 40
Remember what must come. Are you content?

Anna. I am.

Fry. I like it well; wee'le take the time.—

Who's neere us there?

Enter Florio, Giovanni.

Florio. Did you call, father?

Fry. Is Lord Soranzo come?

Flo. Hee staves belowe.

Fry. Have you acquainted him at full?

Flo. I have, 45

And hee is over-joy'd.

Fry. And so are wee.

Bid him come neere.

Giovanni [aside]. My sister weeping, ha!
I feare this fryars falshood. — I will call him.

Exit.

45-8 I have . . . call him. Q prints as four lines ending with . . . over-joy'd . . . neere . . . falshood . . . him.

Flo. Daughter, are you resolv'd?

Anna.

Father, I am.

[Re-]enter Giovanni [with] Soranzo and Vasques.

Flo. My Lord Soranzo, here

50

Give mee your hand; for that I give you this.

Soranzo. Lady, say you so too?

Anna.

I doe, and vow

To live with you and yours.

Fry.

Timely resolv'd:

My blessing rest on both! More to be done,

You may performe it on the morning-sun.

55

Exeunt.

[SCENA SEPTIMA. The street before the monastery.]

Enter Grimaldi with his rapier drawn and a darkelantborne.

Grimaldi. 'Tis early night as yet, and yet too
soone

To finish such a worke; here I will lye

To listen who comes next. Hee lies downe.

Enter Bergetto and Philotis disguis'd; and, after, Richardetto and Poggio.

Bergetto. Wee are almost at the place, I hope, sweet-heart.

Gri. [aside]. I heare them neere, and heard one say "sweet-heart."

5

'Tis hee ; now guide my hand, some angry justice,
Home to his bosome ! Now have at you, sir !

Strikes Ber. and exit.

Ber. Oh, helpe, helpe ! here's a stich fallen in my gutts. Oh, for a flesh-taylor quickly !—
Poggio !

10

Philotis. What ayles my love ?

Ber. I am sure I cannot pisse forward and backward, and yet I am wet before and behind.
— Lights ! lights ! ho, lights !

Pbi. Alas, some villaine here has slaine my love.

15

Richardetto. Oh, heaven forbid it ! Raise up the next neighbours

Instantly, Poggio, and bring lights. Exit Poggio.
How is't, Bergetto ? slaine ? It cannot be ;
Are you sure y'are hurt ?

Ber. O, my belly seeths like a porridge-pot !
Some cold water, I shall boyle over else : my whole body is in a sweat, that you may wring my shirt ; feele here — why, Poggio !

20

[Re-]enter Poggio with officers and lights and balberts.

Poggio. Here. Alas, how doe you ?

Rich. Give me a light. What's here ? all blood ! O, sirs,

25

Signior Donado's nephew now is slaine.
Follow the murtherer with all the haste

Up to the citty; hee cannot be farre hence :
Follow, I beseech you.

Officers. Follow, follow, follow!

Exeunt officers.

Rich. Teare off thy linen, couz, to stop his wounds. 30

Be of good comfort, man.

Ber. Is all this mine owne blood? Nay, then, good-night with me. Poggio, commend me to my unkle, dost heare? Bid him, for my sake, make much of this wench. — Oh! — I am go- 35
ing the wrong way sure, my belly akes so. — Oh, farwell, Poggio! — Oh! — Oh! — Dyes.

Phi. O; hee is dead!

Pog. How! dead!

Rich. Hee's dead indeed;

'Tis now to late to weepe: let's have him home,
And with what speed we may finde out the murtherer. 40

Pog. Oh, my maister! my maister! my maister!

Exeunt.

[SCENA OCTAVA. A room in Hippolita's house.]

Enter Vasques and Hippolita.

Hippolita. Betroath'd?

Vasques. I saw it.

Hip. And when's the marriage-day?

Vas. Some two dayes hence.

Hip. Two dayes! Why, man, I would but wish two houres

To send him to his last and lasting sleepe; 5
And, Vasques, thou shalt see I'le doe it bravely.

Vas. I doe not doubt your wisdome, nor, I trust, you my secreisie; I am infinitely yours.

Hip. I wilbe thine in spight of my disgrace.—
So soone? O wicked man, I durst be sworne 10
Hee'd laugh to see mee weepe.

Vas. And that's a villanous fault in him.

Hip. No, let him laugh; I'me arm'd in my resolves.

Be thou still true.

Vas. I should get little by treachery against so 15
hopefull a preferment as I am like to climbe to.

Hip. Even to my bosome, Vasques! Let my youth
Revell in these new pleasures; if wee thrive,
Hee now hath but a paire of dayes to live. Exeunt.

[SCENA NONA. The street before the Cardinal's gates.]

Enter Florio, Donado, Richardetto, Poggio and Officers.

Florio. 'Tis bootlesse now to shew your selfe
a child,

Signior Donado; what is done, is done:

Spend not the time in teares, but seeke for justice.

Richardetto. I must confesse somewhat I was in fault

That had not first acquainted you what love 5
Past twixt him and my neece; but, as I live,
His fortune grieves me as it were mine owne.

Donado. Ala[s], poore creature! he ment no man harme;

That I am sure of.

Flo. I beleeve that too.

But stay, my maisters, are you sure you saw 10
The murtherer passe here?

[First] Officer. And it please you, sir, wee are sure wee saw a ruffian with a naked weapon in his hand all bloody get into my Lord Cardinals Graces gate; that wee are sure of; but for 15 feare of his grace, bless us, we durst goe no further.

Do. Know you what manner of man hee was?

[Second] Officer. Yes, sure I know the man;
they say a is a souldier; hee that lov'd your 20 daughter, sir, an't please y'ee; 'twas hee for certaine.

Flo. Grimaldi, on my life!

[Second] Officer. I, I, the same.

Rich. The Cardinall is noble; he no doubt
Will give true justice.

Do. Knock, some one, at the gate. 25

Poggio. I'le knocke, sir. Poggio knocks.

Servant (within). What would 'ee?

Flo. Wee require speech with the Lord Cardinall

About some present businesse: pray informe
His grace that we are here..

30

Enter Cardinall and Grimaldi.

Cardinal. Why, how now, friends! What sawcy mates are you

That know nor duty nor civillity?

Are we a person fit to be your hoast,

Or is our house become your common inne,

To beate our dores at pleasure? What such haste 35

Is yours as that it cannot waite fit times?

Are you the maisters of this common-wealth,

And know no more discretion? Oh, your newes

Is here before you; you have lost a nephew,

Donado, last night by Grimaldi slaine:

40

Is that your businesse? Well, sir, we have knowledge on't;

Let that suffice.

Grimaldi. In presence of your grace,
In thought I never ment Bergetto harme;
But, Florio, you can tell with how much scorne
Soranzo, backt with his confederates,

45

Hath often wrong'd mee; I to be reveng'd, —

For that I could not win him else to fight, —

Had thought by way of ambush to have kild him,

But was unluckely therein mistooke;

Else hee had felt what late Bergetto did : 50
 And though my fault to him were meere chance,
 Yet humbly I submit me to your grace,
 To doe with mee as you please.

Car. Rise up, Grimaldi.

You cittizens of Parma, if you seeke
 For justice, know, as nuntio from the Pope, 55
 For this offence I here receive Grimaldi
 Into his holinesse protection.

Hee is no common man, but nobly borne,
 Of princes blood, though you, Sir Florio, Thought him to meane a husband for your daughter. 60

If more you seeke for, you must goe to Rome,
 For hee shall thither : learne more wit, for shame.
 Bury your dead. — Away, Grimaldi ; leave 'em.

Ex. Car. & Gri.

Do. Is this a church-mans voyce? Dwels justice here?

Flo. Justice is fledd to heaven, and comes no
 neerer. 65

Soranzo ! Was't for him ? O, impudence !
 Had he the face to speake it, and not blush ?
 Come, come, Donado, there's no helpe in this,
 When cardinals thinke murder's not amisse.
 Great men may do there wills, we must obey ; 70
 But heaven will judge them for't another day.

Exeunt.

ACTUS QUARTUS.

[SCENA PRIMA. A room in Florio's house.]
A banquet. Hoboyes.

Enter the Fryar, Giovanni, Annabella, Philotis, Soranzo, Donado, Florio, Richardetto, Putana and Vasques.

Fryar. These holy rights perform'd, now take your times

To spend the remnant of the day in feast:
Such fit repasts are pleasing to the saints
Who are your guests, though not with mortall eyes

To be beheld. Long prosper in this day, 5
You happy couple, to each others joy!

Soranzo. Father, your prayer is heard; the hand of goodnesse

Hath beene a sheild for me against my death;
And, more to blesse me, hath enricht my life
With this most precious jewell; such a prize 10
As earth hath not another like to this.

Cheere up, my love; and, gentlemen my friends,
Rejoyce with mee in mirth: this day wee'le crowne
With lusty cups to Annabella's health.

Giovanni (aside). Oh, torture! were the marriage yet undone, 15

Ere I'de endure this sight, to see my love
 Clipt by another, I would dare confusion,
 And stand the horreur of ten thousand deaths.

Vasques. Are you not well, sir?

Gio. Prethee, fellow, wayte;
 I neede not thy officious diligence. 20

Florio. Signior Donado, come, you must forget Your late mishaps, and drowne your cares in wine.

Soran. Vasques!

Vas. My lord.

Soran. Reach me that weighty bowle.
 Here, brother Giovanni, here's to you;
 Your turne comes next, though now a batche-lour; 25

Here's to your sisters happinesse and mine!

Gio. I cannot drinke.

Soran. What!

Gio. 'Twill indeede offend me.

Annabella. Pray, doe not urge him, if hee be not willing.

Flo. How now! what noyse is this?

Vas. O, sir, I had forgot to tell you; certaine 30 young maidens of Parma, in honour to Madam Annabella's marriage, have sent their loves to 29 How . . . this? G-D inserts the stage direction Hautboys before this line.

31 young. Q, youg.

her in a masque, for which they humbly crave your patience and silence.

Soran. Wee are much bound to them; so much the more
As it comes unexpected: guide them in.

35

Hoboyes.

Enter Hippolita and Ladies in white roubes with gar-lands of willowes.

Musicke and a Daunce.

Soran. Thanks, lovely virgins! now might wee but know
To whom wee have beene beholding for this love,
We shall acknowledge it.

Hippolita.

Yes, you shall know.

[Unmasks.]

What thinke you now?

Omnes.

Hippolita!

Hip.

'Tis shee; 40

Bee not amaz'd; nor blush young lovely bride;

I come not to defraud you of your man:

'Tis now no time to reckon up the talke

What Parma long hath rumour'd of us both:

Let rash report run on; the breath that vents it 45

35-6 Wee . . . in. Q prints as prose.

38 this. So G-D; so copy in British Museum and copy in Boston Public Library. Dyce's copy had thy; so copy in library of the University of Illinois.

Will, like a bubble, breake it selfe at last.
But now to you, sweet creature; — lend's your hand; —

Perhaps it hath beene said that I would claime
Some interest in Soranzo, now your lord;
What I have right to doe his soule knowes best: 50
But in my duty to your noble worth,
Sweete Annabella, and my care of you,
Here take, Soranzo, take this hand from me;
I'le once more joyne what by the holy Church
Is finish't and allow'd. Have I done well? 55

Soran. You have too much ingag'd us.

Hip. One thing more,

That you may know my single charity,
Freely I here remit all interest
I ere could clayme, and give you backe your
vowes;

And to confirm't, — reach me a cup of wine, — 60
My Lord Soranzo, in this draught I drinke Long rest t'ee! — [Aside to Vasques.] Looke to it, Vasques.

Vas. Fear nothing.

He gives her a poysond cup; she drinks.

Soran. Hippolita, I thanke you, and will pledge
This happy union as another life. — 65
Wine, there!

Vas. You shall have none; neither shall you pledge her.

Hip. How!

Vas. Know now, mistresse shee devill, your owne mischievous treachery hath kild you; I 70 must not marry you.

Hip. Villaine!

Omnes. What's the matter?

Vas. Foolish woeman, thou art now like a fire-brand that hath kindled others and burnt thy 75 selfe: — Tropposperar, inganna, — thy vaine hope hath deceived thee; thou art but dead; if thou hast any grace, pray.

Hip. Monster!

Vas. Dye in charity, for shame. This thing 80 of malice, this woman, had privately corrupted mee with promise of malice, under this politique reconciliation to poyson my lord, whiles shee might laugh at his confusion on his marriage day. I promis'd her faire, but I knew what my reward 85 should have beene, and would willingly have spar'd her life, but that I was acquainted with the danger of her disposition; and now have fitted her a just payment in her owne coyne: there shee is, shee hath yet — and end thy dayes 90 in peace, vild woman; as for life, there's no hope; thinke not on't.

Omnes. Wonderfull justice!

76 inganna. So G-D. Q, niganna.

82 malice. Changed in G-D to marriage.

Richardetto. Heaven, thou art righteous.

Hip. O, 'tis true;

I feele my minute comming. Had that slave 95
Kept promise, — O, my torment, — thou this houre

Had'st dyed, Soranzo; — heate above hell fire! —
Yet ere I passe away, — cruell, cruell flames, —
Take here my curse amongst you; may thy bed
Of marriage be a racke unto thy heart, 100
Burne blood and boyle in vengeance — O, my
heart,

My flame's intolerable! — maist thou live
To father bastards; may her wombe bring forth
Monsters; and dye together in your sinnes,
Hated, scorn'd and unpittied — Oh! — Oh! 105
Dyes.

Flo. Was e're so vild a creature?

Rich. Here's the end

Of lust and pride.

Anna. It is a fearefull sight.

Soran. Vasques, I know thee now a trusty servant,

And never will forget thee. — Come, my love, Wee'le home, and thanke the heavens for this escape. 110

Father and friends, wee must breake up this mirth;

It is too sad a feast.

Donado. Beare hence the body.

Fry. [aside to Gio.]. Here's an ominous change!

Marke this, my Giovani, and take heed!

I feare the event; that marriage seldome's good 115
Where the bride-banquet so begins in blood.

Exeunt.

[SCENA SECUNDA. A room in Richardetto's house.]

Enter Richardetto and Philotis.

Richardetto. My wretched wife, more wretched
ed in her shame

Then in her wrongs to me, hath paid too soone
The forfeit of her modesty and life.

And I am sure, my neece, though vengeance
hover,

Keeping aloofe yet from Soranzo's fall, 5
Yet hee will fall, and sinke with his owne weight.

I need not — now my heart perswades me so —
To further his confusion; there is one
Above begins to worke: for, as I heare,
Debate's already twixt his wife and him 10

2 hath. Q in Boston Public Library misprints a second hath following this; the copy at the University of Illinois has only one.

7 now. G-D puts the dash after now. Q prints now . . . so in parentheses.

Thicken and run to head; shee, as 'tis sayd,
 Sleightens his love, and he abandons hers:
 Much talke I heare. Since things goe thus, my niece,

In tender love and pittie of your youth,
 My counsell is, that you should free your yeeres 15
 From hazard of these woes by flying hence
 To faire Cremona, there to vow your soule
 In holinesse a holy votaresse:

Leave me to see the end of these extreames.

All humane worldly courses are uneven; 20
 No life is blessed but the way to heaven.

Philotis. Unkle, shall I resolve to be a nun?

Rich. I, gentle niece, and in your hourelly prayers

Remember me, your poore unhappy unkle.

Hie to Cremona now, as fortune leades, 25
 Your home your cloyster, your best friends your beades.

Your chaste and single life shall crowne your birth;

Who dyes a virgine, live a saint on earth.

Phi. Then farwell, world, and worldly thoughts, adeiu!

Welcome, chaste vowes; myselfe I yeeld to you. 30

Exeunt.

[SCENA TERTIA. A chamber in Soranzo's house.]

Enter Soranzo unbrac't, and Annabella dragg'd in.

Soranzo. Come, strumpet, famous whoore!
were every drop

Of blood that runs in thy adulterous veynes
A life, this sword — dost see't? — should in one blowe

Confound them all. Harlot, rare, notable harlot,
That with thy brazen face maintainst thy sinne, 5

Was there no man in Parma to be bawd
To your loose cunning whoredome else but I?

Must your hot ytch and plurisie of lust,
The heyday of your luxury, be fedd
Up to a surfeite, and could none but I 10

Be pickt out to be cloake to your close tricks,
Your belly-sports? Now I must be the dad

To all that gallymaufrey that's stuff
In thy corrupted bastard-bearing wombe!

Say, must I?

Annabella. Beastly man, why 'tis thy fate. 15

I sued not to thee; for, but that I thought
Your over-loving lordship would have runne

Madd on denyall, had yee lent me time,
I would have told 'ee in what case I was:

But you would needes be doing.

Soran. Whore of whores! 20
Dar'st thou tell mee this?

Anna. O, yes; why not?
You were deceiv'd in mee; 'twas not for love
I chose you, but for honour: yet know this,
Would you be patient yet, and hide your shame,
I'de see whether I could love you.

Soran. Excellent queane! 25
Why art thou not with child?

Anna. What needs all this,
When 'tis superfluous? I confesse I am.

Soran. Tell mee by whome.

Anna. Soft, sir! 'twas not in my bargaine.
Yet somewhat, sir, to stay your longing stom-acke,

I'me content t'acquaint you with: The man, 30
The more then man, that got this sprightly boy,—
For 'tis a boy, that for glory, sir,
Your heyre shalbe a sonne—

Soran. Damnable monster!

Anna. Nay, and you will not heare, I'le speake no more.

Soran. Yes, speake, and speake thy last.

Anna. A match, a match! — 35
This noble creature was in every part

28 sir. G-D omits.

30 I'me. G-D, I am.

32 that for glory, sir. G-D accepts the correction of Dodsley, reading [and] therefore glory, sir.

So angell-like, so glorious, that a woeman
 Who had not beene but human, as was I,
 Would have kneel'd to him, and have beg'd for
 love. —

You! why you are not worthy once to name 40
 His name without true worship, or, indeede, Unlesse you kneel'd, to heare another name
 him.

Soran. What was hee cal'd?

Anna. Wee are not come to that;
 Let it suffice that you shall have the glory
 To father what so brave a father got. 45
 In briefe, had not this chance falne out as't doth,
 I never had beene troubled with a thought
 That you had beene a creature: — but for marriage,
 I scarce dreame yet of that.

Soran. Tell me his name.

Anna. Alas, alas, there's all! Will you be-leeve? 50

Soran. What?

Anna. You shall never know.

Soran. How!

Anna. Never.

If you doe, let mee be curst.

Soran. Not know it, strumpet! I'le ripp up thy heart,
 And finde it there.

Anna. Doe, doe !

Soran. And with my teeth
Teare the prodigious leacher joynt by joynt. 55

Anna. Ha, ha, ha ! the man's merry.

Soran. Do'st thou laugh ?
Come, whore, tell mee your lover, or, by truth
I'le hew thy flesh to shreds ; who is't ?

Anna. Che morte [più] dolce che morire per amore ? (Sings.

Soran. Thus will I pull thy hayre, and thus I'le drag 60
Thy lust be-leapred body through the dust.
Yet tell his name.

Anna. Morendo in gra[z]ia [dee] morire senza dolore. (Sings.

Soran. Dost thou triumph ? The treasure of the earth
Shall not redeeme thee ; were there kneeling kings 65
Did begge thy life, or angells did come downe
To plead in teares, yet should not all prevayle
Against my rage : do'st thou not tremble yet ?

Anna. At what ? to dye ? No, be a gallant hang-man ;

I dare thee to the worst : strike, and strike home. 70
[I] leave revenge behind, and thou shalt feel't.

59 [più]. Q, plus. 63 grazia. Q, gratia.

63 [dee.] Q, Lei. These corrections of the Italian follow G-D.
Weber printed the line thus : Morendo in gratia Dei morire senza dolore.

Soran. Yet tell mee ere thou dyest, and tell mee truely,
Knowes thy old father this ?

Anna. No, by my life.

Soran. Wilt thou confesse, and I will spare thy life ?

Anna. My life ? I will not buy my life so deare. 75

Soran. I will not slacke my vengeance.

Enter Vasques.

Vasques. What d'ee meane, sir ?

Soran. Forbeare, Vasques ; such a damned whore

Deserves no pittty.

Vas. Now the gods forefend !

And wud you be her executioner, and kill her in your rage, too ? O, 'twere most un-manlike. 80 Shee is your wife : what faults hath beene done by her before she married you, were not against you. Alas, poore lady, what hath shee committed which any lady in Italy in the like case would not ? Sir, you must be ruled by your 85 reason, and not by your fury ; that were unhu-mane and beastly.

Soran. Shee shall not live.

Vas. Come, shee must. You would have her confesse the authors of her present misfortunes, 90

79 wud. G-D, would.

90 authors. So Q and G. D changes to author.

I warrant 'ee; 'tis an unconscionable demand, and shee should loose the estimation that I, for my part, hold of her worth, if shee had done it. Why, sir, you ought not of all men living to know it. Good sir, bee reconciled. Alas, good 95 gentlewoman. .

Anna. Pish, doe not beg for mee ; I prize my life

As nothing. If the man will needs bee madd,
Why let him take it.

Soran. Vasques, hear'st thou this?

Vas. Yes, and commend her for it; in this 100 shee shews the noblenesse of a gallant spirit, and beshrew my heart, but it becomes her rarely. — [Aside to Soran.] Sir, in any case smother your revenge; leave the senting out your wrongs to mee: bee rul'd, as you respect [y]our honour, 105 or you marr all. — [Aloud.] Sir, if ever my service were of any credit with you, be not so violent in your distractions: you are married now, what a tryumph might the report of this give to other neglected sutors! 'Tis as manlike to beare 110 extremities as godlike to forgive.

Soran. O, Vasques, Vasques, in this peece of flesh,
This faithlesse face of hers, had I layd up

104 senting out. G-D, scenting-out.

105 [y] our. Q, hour.

The treasure of my heart! — Hadst thou beene vertuous,

Faire wicked woeman, not the matchlesse joyes ¹¹⁵
Of life it selfe had made mee wish to live
With any saint but thee : deceitfull creature, How hast thou mock't my hopes, and in the shame

Of thy lewd wombe even buried mee alive!

I did too dearely love thee.

120

Vas. (aside). This is well; follow this temper with some passion : bee briefe and moving; 'tis for the purpose.

Soran. Be witnesse to my words thy soule and thoughts,

And tell mee, didst not thinke that in my heart ¹²⁵
I did too superstitiously adore thee?

Anna. I must confesse I know you lov'd mee
well.

Soran. And wouldst thou use mee thus? O
Annabella,

Bee thus assur'd, whatsoe're the villaine was
That thus hath tempted thee to this disgrace, ¹³⁰
Well hee might lust, but never lov'd like mee :
Hee doated on the picture that hung out
Upon thy cheekes to please his humourous eye;

121-3 This is . . . purpose. Q prints as verse.

129 Bee thus assur'd, whatsoe're. G-D, Be thou assur'd, whoe'er.

Not on the part I lov'd, which was thy heart,
And, as I thought, thy vertues.

Anna. O, my lord ! 135

These words wound deeper then your sword could do.

Vas. Let mee not ever take comfort, but I begin to weepe my selfe, so much I pittie him :
why, madam, I knew when his rage was over-past, what it would come to. 140

Soran. Forgive mee, Annabella ; though thy youth

Hath tempted thee above thy strength to folly,
Yet will not I forget what I should bee,
And what I am — a husband ; in that name
Is hid devinity : if I doe finde 145

That thou wilt yet be true, here I remit
All former faults, and take thee to my bosome.

Vas. By my troth, and that's a poynt of noble charity.

Anna. Sir, on my knees —

Soran. Rise up, you shall not kneele.

Get you to your chamber ; see you make no
shew 150

Of alteration ; Ile be with you streight.

My reason tells mee now that '*Tis as common
To erre in frailty as to bee a woeman.*

Goe to your chamber. Exit Anna.

Vas. So ! this was somewhat to the matter. 155

What doe you thinke of your heaven of happiness now, sir ?

Soran. I carry hell about mee ; all my blood
Is fir'd in swift revenge.

Vas. That may bee, but know you how, or ¹⁶⁰ on whom ? Alas, to marry a great woeman, being made great in the stocke to your hand, is a usuall sport in these dayes ; but to know what secret it was that haunted your cunny-berry,— there's the cunning. 165

Soran. I'le make her tell her selfe, or—

Vas. Or what ? — You must not doe so ; let me yet perswade your sufferance a little while. Goe to her ; use her mildly ; winne her, if it be possible, to a voluntary, to a weeping tune : for ¹⁷⁰ the rest, if all hitt, I will not misse my marke. Pray, sir, goe in. The next news I tell you shall be wonders.

Soran. Delay in vengeance gives a heavyer blow. Exit.

Vas. Ah, sirrah, here's worke for the nonce ! ¹⁷⁵
I had a suspicion of a bad matter in my head a pretty while agoe ; but after my madams scurvy lookes here at home, her waspish perversnesse and loud fault-finding, then I remembered the 160 you. Q, yoo.

164 secret. G-D accepts Dodsley's emendation, ferret. haunted. G-D, hunted.

proverbe, that “where hens crowe, and cocks ¹⁸⁰ hold their peace, there are sorry houses.” Sfoot!
if the lower parts of a shee-taylors cunning can cover such a swelling in the stomacke, I’le never blame a false stich in a shoe whiles I live againe.
Up, and up so quicke? and so quickly too? ¹⁸⁵
’Twere a fine policy to learne by whom this must be knowne; and I have thought on’t —

Enter Putana.

Here’s the way, or none.— What, crying, old mistresse! Alas, alas, I cannot blame ’ce; wee have a lord, heaven helpe us, is so madde as the ¹⁹⁰ devill himselve, the more shame for him.

Putana. O, Vasques, that ever I was borne to see this day! Doth hee use thee so too sometimes, Vasques?

Vas. Mee? Why hee makes a dogge of mee; ¹⁹⁵ but if some were of my minde, I know what wee would doe. As sure as I am an honest man, hee will goe neere to kill my lady with unkindnesse. Say shee be with-child, is that such a matter for a young woeman of her yeeres to be ²⁰⁰
blam’d for?

Put. Alas, good heart, it is against her will full sore.

Vas. I durst be sworne all his madnesse is for ¹⁸⁶ whom. G-D prints a colon after this.

Enter Putana. Q prints after shame for him.

that shee will not confesse whose 'tis, which hee ²⁰⁵ will know; and when he doth know it, I am so well acquainted with his humour, that hee will forget all streight. Well, I could wish shee would in plaine termes tell all, for that's the way, indeed. 210

Put. Doe you thinke so?

Vas. Fo, I know't; provided that hee did not winne her to't by force. Hee was once in a mind that you could tell, and ment to have wrung it out of you; but I somewhat pacified him for ²¹⁵ that: yet sure you know a great deale.

Put. Heaven forgive us all! I know a little,
Vasques.

Vas. Why should you not? Who else should?
Upon my conscience, shee loves you dearely, and ²²⁰
you would not betray her to any affliction for
the world.

Put. Not for all the world, by my faith and troth, Vasques.

Vas. 'Twere pittie of your life if you should; ²²⁵
but in this you should both relieve her present discomforts, pacifie my lord, and gaine your selfe everlasting love and preferment.

Put. Do'st thinke so, Vasques?

Vas. Nay, I know't; sure 'twas some neere ²³⁰ and entire friend.

Put. 'Twas a deare friend indeed; but —

Vas. But what? Feare not to name him; my life betweene you and danger; faith, I thinke 'twas no base fellow. 235

Put. Thou wilt stand betweene mee and harme?

Vas. Ud's pittie, what else? You shalbe rewarded, too; trust me.

Put. 'Twas even no worse then her owne brother. 240

Vas. Her brother Giovanni, I warrant'ee!

Put. Even hee, Vasques; as brave a gentle men as ever kist faire lady. O, they love most perpetually. 245

Vas. A brave gentleman indeed! Why therein I commend her choyce. — [Aside.] Better and better. — You are sure 'twas hee?

Put. Sure; and you shall see hee will not be long from her too. 250

Vas. He were to blame if he would: but may I beleeve thee?

Put. Beleeve mee! Why do'st thinke I am a Turke or a Jew? No, Vasques, I have knowne their dealings too long to belye them now. 255

Vas. Where are you? there within, sirs!

Enter Bandetti.

Put. How now! What are these?

Vas. You shall know presently.— Come, sirs,

256 Where are you? So Q. G-D puts the interrogation mark after there.

take mee this old damnable hagge, gag her instantly, and put out her eyes, quickly, quickly! 260

Put. Vasques! Vasques!

Vas. Gag her, I say; sfoot, d'ee suffer her to prate? What d'ee fumble about? Let mee come to her. I'le helpe your old gums, you toad-bellied bitch! Sirs, carry her closely into the coale-265 house, and put out her eyes instantly; if shee roares, slitt her nose. D'ee heare, bee speedy and sure. [Exeunt Ban.] with Putana. Why this is excellent and above expectation! Her owne brother? O, horrible! to what a height of liberty 270 in damnation hath the devill trayn'd our age! her brother, well! there's yet but a beginning; I must to my lord, and tutor him better in his points of vengeance. Now I see how a smooth tale goes beyond a smooth taylor. — But soft! 275 what thing comes next?

Enter Giovanni.

Giovanni! as I would wish: my beleefe is strengthened; 'tis as firme as winter and summer.

Giovanni. Where's my sister?

Vas. Troubled with a new sicknes, my lord; 280 she's somewhat ill.

Gio. Tooke too much of the flesh, I beleeve.

Vas. Troth, sir, and you, I thinke, have e'ne hitt it; but my vertuous lady —

268 [Exeunt Ban.] So G-D. Q has Exit with Putana.

Gio. Where's shee?

285

Vas. In her chamber; please you visit her; she is alone. [Gio. gives him money.] Your liberality hath doubly made me your servant, and ever shall, ever. Exit Gio.

[Re-]enter Soranzo.

Sir, I am made a man; I have plyed my cue²⁹⁰ with cunning and successe. I beseech you let's be private.

Soran. My ladyes brother's come; now hee'le know all.

Vas. Let him know't; I have made some of²⁹⁵ them fast enough. How have you delt with my lady?

Soran. Gently, as thou hast counsail'd; O, my soule

Runs circular in sorrow for revenge:

But, Vasques, thou shalt know —

300

Vas. Nay, I will know no more; for now comes your turne to know: I would not talke so openly with you. — [Aside.] Let my young maister take time enough, and goe at pleasure; hee is sold to death, and the devill shall not ransome³⁰⁵ him. — Sir, I beseech you, your privacy.

Soran. No conquest can gayne glory of my feare.

[Exeunt.]

[Exeunt.] Q, exit.

ACTUS QUINTUS.

[SCENA PRIMA. The street before Soranzo's house.]

Enter Annabella above.

Annabella. Pleasures, farwell, and all yee thriflesse minutes

Wherein false joyes have spun a weary life!
To these my fortunes now I take my leave.
Thou precious Time that swiftly rid'st in poast
Over the world to finish up the race 5
Of my last fate, here stay thy restlesse course,
And beare to ages that are yet unborne
A wretched, woefull woemans tragedy!
My conscience now stands up against my lust
With dispositions charectred in guilt, 10

Enter Fryar [below].

And tells mee I am lost: now I confesse,
*Beauty that cloathes the out-side of the face
Is cursed if it be not cloath'd with grace.*
Here like a turtle mew'd up in a cage,
Un-mated, I converse with ayre and walls, 15
And descant on my vild unhappinesse.
O, Giovanni, that hast had the spoyle
Of thine owne vertues and my modest fame,

10 dispositions. G-D, depositions.

Would thou hadst beene lesse subject to those stars

That luckesse raig'd at my nativity! 20

O would the scourge due to my blacke offence
Might passe from thee, that I alone might feele
The torment of an uncontroled flame!

Fryar. [aside]. What's this I heare?

Anna. That man, that blessed fryar,
Who joynd in ceremoniall knot my hand 25

To him whose wife I now am, told mee oft
I trod the path to death, and shewed mee how.

But they who sleepe in lethargies of lust

Hugge their confusion, making heaven unjust;

And so did I.

Fry. [aside]. Here's musicke to the soule! 30

Anna. Forgive mee, my good Genius, and this once

Be helpfull to my ends: let some good man
Passe this way, to whose trust I may commit

This paper double lin'd with teares and blood:

Which being granted, here I sadly vow 35

Repentance, and a leaving of that life

I long have dyed in.

Fry. Lady, heaven hath heard you,

And hath by providence ordain'd that I

Should be his minister for your behoofe.

Anna. Ha, what are you?

Fry. Your brothers friend, the Fryar; 40

Glad in my soule that I have liv'd to heare
 This free confession twixt your peace and you.
 What would you, or to whom? Feare not to speake.

Anna. Is heaven so bountifull? Then I have found

More favour then I hop'd. Here, holy man: 45

Throwes a letter.

Commend mee to my brother; give him that,
 That letter; bid him read it, and repent.

Tell him that I, imprison'd in my chamber,
 Bard of all company, even of my guardian,—
 Who gives me cause of much suspect,— have time 50

To blush at what hath past; bidd him be wise,
 And not beleeve the friendship of my lord:

I feare much more then I can speake: good
 father,

The place is dangerous, and spyes are busie;
 I must breake off—you'le doe't?

Fry.

Be sure I will, 55

And fly with speede.— My blessing ever rest
 With thee, my daughter; live to dye more blessed!

Exit Fry.

Anna. Thanks to the heavens, who have pro-long'd my breath

To this good use! Now I can welcome death.

Exit.

[SCENA SECUNDA. A room in Soranzo's house.]

Enter Soranza and Vasques.

Vasques. Am I to be beleev'd now? First marry a strumpet that cast her selfe away upon you but to laugh at your hornes, to feast on your disgrace, riott in your vexations, cuckold you in your bride-bed, waste your estate upon panders and bawds — 5

Soranzo. No more, I say, no more!

Vas. A cuckold is a goodly tame beast, my lord.

Soran. I am resolv'd; urge not another word; 10

My thoughts are great, and all as resolute
As thunder. In meane time I'le cause our lady
To decke her selfe in all her bridall robes,
Kisse her, and fold her gently in my armes.
Begone, — yet, heare you, are the bandetti ready 15
To waite in ambush?

Vas. Good sir, trouble not your selfe about other busines then your owne resolution; remember that time lost cannot be recal'd.

Soran. With all the cunning words thou canst, invite 20
The states of Parma to my birth-dayes feast.

Haste to my brother rivall and his father ;
 Entreate them gently, bidd them not to fayle.
 Bee speedy and returne.

Vas. Let not your pittie betray you till my com- 25 ming backe; thinke upon incest and cuckoldry.

Soran. Revenge is all the ambition I aspire ;
 To that I'le clime or fall ; my blood's on fire.

Exeunt.

[SCENA TERTIA. A room in Florio's house.]

Enter Giovanni.

Giovanni. Busie opinion is an idle foole
 That, as a schoole-rod, keepes a child in awe,
 Frights the unexperienc't temper of the mind :
 So did it mee, who, ere my precious sister
 Was married, thought all tast of love would dye 5
 In such a contract ; but I finde no change
 Of pleasure in this formall law of sports.
 Shee is still one to mee, and every kisse
 As sweet and as delicious as the first
 I reap't, when yet the priviledge of youth 10
 Intitled her a virgine. O, the glory
 Of two united hearts like hers and mine !
 Let poaring booke-men dreame of other worlds ;
 My world and all of happinesse is here,
 And I'de not change it for the best to come : — 15
 A life of pleasure is Elyzeum.

Enter Fryar.

Father, you enter on the jubile
Of my retyr'd delights; now I can tell you
The hell you oft have prompted is nought else
But slavish and fond superstitious feare; 20
And I could prove it too —

Fryar. Thy blindnesse slayes thee:
Looke there, 'tis writt to thee. Gives the letter.

Gio. From whom?

Fry. Unrip the seales and see.
The blood's yet seething hot that will anon 25
Be frozen harder then congeal'd corral.
Why d'ee change colour, sonne?

Gio. Fore heaven, you make
Some petty devill factor 'twixt my love
And your relligion-masked sorceries.
Where had you this?

Fry. Thy conscience, youth, is sear'd; 30
Else thou wouldst stoope to warning.

Gio. 'Tis her hand,
I know't; and 'tis all written in her blood.
She writes I know not what. Death? I'le not feare

An armed thunder-bolt aym'd at my heart.
Shee writes wee are discovered — pox on dreames 35
Of lowe faint-hearted cowardise! — discovered?
The devill wee are! which way is't possible?
Are wee growne traytours to our owne delights?

Confusion take such dotage! 'tis but forg'd;
This is your peevish chattering, weake old man! 40

Enter Vasques.

Now, sir, what newes bring you?

Vasques. My lord, according to his yearely custome, keeping this day a feast in honour of his birth-day, by mee invites you thither. Your worthy father, with the popes reverend nuntio, 45 and other magnifico's of Parma, have promis'd their presence; wil't please you to be of the number?

Gio. Yes, tell them I dare come.

Vas. Dare come? 50

Gio. So I sayd; and tell him more, I will come.

Vas. These words are strange to mee.

Gio. Say I will come.

Vas. You will not misse? 55

Gio. Yet more! I'le come, sir. Are you an-swer'd?

Vas. So I'le say. — My service to you.

Exit Vas.

Fry. You will not goe, I trust.

Gio. Not goe? for what?

Fry. O, doe not goe; this feast, I'le gage my life,

Enter Vasques. Q prints this below the question following.

49 them. G-D, him.

56 Q has a semicolon after come and a comma after sir.

Is but a plot to trayne you to your ruine. 60
 Be rul'd, you sha' not goe.

Gio. Not goe! stood Death
 Threatning his armies of confounding plagues
 With hoasts of dangers hot as blazing starrs,
 I would 'be there. Not goe? yes, and resolve
 To strike as deepe in slaughter as they all; 65
 For I will goe.

Fry. Go where thou wilt: I see
 The wildnesse of thy fate drawes to an end,
 To a bad fearefull end. I must not stay
 To know thy fall; backe to Bononia I
 With speed will haste, and shun this comming
 blowe. 70

Parma, farwell; would I have never knowne
 thee,

Or ought of thine! Well, young man, since no prayer

Can make thee safe, I leave thee to despayre.

Exit Fry.

[Gio.] Despaire or tortures of a thousand hells,
 All's one to mee; I have set up my rest. 75

Now, now, worke serious thoughts on banefull plots;

Be all a man, my soule; let not the curse
 Of old prescription rent from mee the gall
 Of courage, which inrolls a glorious death.
 If I must totter like a well-growne oake, 80

Some under shrubs shall in my weighty fall
 Be crusht to splitts; with me they all shall perish!

Exit.

[SCENA QUARTA. A hall in Soranzo's house.]

Enter Soranzo, Vasques and Bandetti.

Soranzo. You will not fayle, or shrinke in the attempt?

Vasques. I will undertake for their parts.—
 Be sure, my maisters, to be bloody enough, and as unmercifull as if you were praying upon a 5 rich booty on the very mountaines of Liguria.
 For your pardons trust to my lord; but for reward you shall trust none but your owne pockets.

Bandetti omnes. Wee'le make a murther.

Soran. Here's gold; here's more; want nothing. What you do 10
 Is noble, and an act of brave revenge.
 I'le make yee rich, bandetti, and all free.

Omnes. Liberty! Liberty!

Vas. Hold; take every man a vizard. When yee are withdrawne, keepe as much silence as 15 you can possibly. You know the watch-word; till which be spoken, move not; but when you heare that, rush in like a stormy flood: I neede not instruct yee in your owne profession.

Omnes. No, no, no. 20

Vas. In, then: your ends are profit and preferment: away!
Exeunt Bandetti.

Soran. The guests will all come, Vasques?

Vas. Yes, sir. And now let me a little edge your resolution: you see nothing is unready to this great worke, but a great mind in you. Call to your remembrance your disgraces, your losse of honour, Hippolita's blood; and arme your courage in your owne wrongs; so shall you best right those wrongs in vengeance, which you may truely call your owne.

Soran. 'Tis well: the lesse I speake, the more
 I burne,
 And blood shall quench that flame.

Vas. Now you begin to turne Italian. This beside: — when my young incest-monger comes, hee wilbe sharpe set on his old bitt: give him time enough, let him have your chamber and bed at liberty; let my hot hare have law ere he be hunted to his death, that, if it be possible, hee may poast to hell in the very act of his damnation.

Soran. It shall be so; and see, as wee would wish,
 Hee comes himselfe first.

[E]nter Giovanni.

Welcome, my much-lov'd brother:

22 Exeunt. Q, Exit.

[E]nter Giovanni. Q prints in somewhat broken type in the margin at the left.

Now I perceive you honour me; y'are welcome.
But where's my father?

Giovanni. With the other states,
Attending on the nuntio of the pope, 45
To waite upon him hither. How's my sister?

Soran. Like a good huswife, scarcely ready yet;
Y'are best walke to her chamber.

Gio. If you will.

Soran. I must expect my honourable friends;
Good brother, get her forth.

Gio. You are busie, sir. 50

Exit Giovanni.

Vas. Even as the great devill himselfe would have it! Let him goe and glut himselfe in his owne destruction. Harke, the nuntio is at hand:
good sir, be ready to receive him.

[F] lourish.

Enter Cardinall, Florio, Donado, Richardetto, and Attendants.

Soran. Most reverend lord, this grace hath made me proud, 55
That you vouchsafe my house; I ever rest
Your humble servant for this noble favour.

Cardinall. You are our friend, my lord: his Holinesse
Shall understand how zealously you honour
Saint Peters vicar in his substitute: 60
Our speciall love to you.

Soran. Signiors, to you
My welcome, and my ever best of thanks
For this so memorable courtesie.
Pleaseth your grace to walke neere ?

Car. My lord, wee come
To celebrate your feast with civill mirth, 65
As ancient custome teacheth : we will goe.

Soran. Attend his grace there ! Signiors, keepe your way. Exeunt.

[SCENA QUINTA. Annabella's chamber.]

Enter Giovanni and Annabella lying on a bed.

Giovanni. What, chang'd so soone ! Hath your new sprightly lord
Found out a tricke in night-games more then wee
Could know in our simplicity ? Ha ! is't so ?
Or does the fitt come on you to prove treacherous

To your past vowes and oathes ?

Annabella. Why should you jeast
At my calamity, without all sence
Of the approaching dangers you are in ?

Gio. What danger's halfe so great as thy revolt ?

Thou art a faithlesse sister, else thou know'st

Malice or any treachery beside 10
 Would stoope to my bent browes: why I hold
 fate

Clasp't in my fist, and could command the course
 Of times eternall motion, hadst thou beene
 One thought more stedy then an ebbing sea.
 And what? you'le now be honest — that's resolv'd? 15

Anna. Brother, deare brother, know what I have beene,
 And know that now there's but a dyning time
 Twixt us and our confusion: let's not waste
 These precious houres in vayne and uselesse speech.

Alas, these gay attyres were not put on 20
 But to some end; this suddaine solemne feast
 Was not ordayn'd to riott in expence;
 I, that have now beene chambred here alone,
 Bard of my guardian or of any else,
 Am not for nothing at an instant free'd 25
 To fresh accesse. Be not deceiv'd, my brother,
 This banquet is an harbinger of death
 To you and mee; resolve your selfe it is,
 And be prepar'd to welcome it.

17 dyning time. G-D, dining-time, which Dyce says is the reading of his quarto. A copy in the British Museum, according to D, gives dying time. The copies in the Boston Public Library and the library of the University of Illinois have dyning.

Gio. Well, then :
The schoole-men teach that all this globe of earth 30
Shalbe consum'd to ashes in a minute.

Anna. So I have read too.

Gio. But 'twere somewhat strange
To see the waters burne : could I beleeve
This might be true, I could beleeve as well
There might be hell or heaven.

Anna. That's most certaine. 35

Gio. A dreame, a dreame ! else in this other world

Wee should know one another.

Anna. So wee shall.

Gio. Have you heard so ?

Anna. For certaine.

Gio. But d'ee thinke
That I shall see you there ? — You looke on mee ?

May wee kisse one another, prate or laugh, 40
Or doe as wee doe here ?

Anna. I know not that.

But good, for the present what d'ee meane
To free your selfe from danger ? Some way, thinke
How to escape : I'me sure the guests are come.

38-41 But d'ee thinke . . . doe here ? Q breaks this up into six short lines ending with thinke . . . there . . . mee . . . another . . . laugh . . . here.

42 good. G-D, brother, substituted for the sake of the metre.

Gio. Looke up, looke here; what see you in my face? 45

Anna. Distraction and a troubled countenance.

Gio. Death and a swift repining wrath: —
yet looke;

What see you in mine eyes?

Anna. Methinkes you weepe.

Gio. I doe indeed; these are the funerall
teares

Shed on your grave; these furrowed up my cheekes 50

When first I lov'd and knew not how to woe.

Faire Annabella, should I here repeate

The story of my life, wee might loose time.

Be record all the spirits of the ayre

And all things else that are, that day and night, 55

Earely and late, the tribute which my heart

Hath paid to Annabella's sacred love

Hath been these teares, which are her mourners
now!

Never till now did nature doe her best

To shew a matchlesse beauty to the world, 60

Which in an instant, ere it scarce was seene,

The jealous Destinies require againe.

46 countenance. G-D, conscience, Dodsley's correction.

51 woe. G-D, woo, and so the copy at the University of Illinois.

62 require. G-D, requir'd. Dyce says in a note that the

Pray, Annabella, pray! Since wee must part,
Goe thou, white in thy soule, to fill a throne
Of innocence and sanctity in heaven.

65

Pray, pray, my sister!

Anna. Then I see your drift —
Yee blessed angels, guard mee!

Gio. So say I!
Kisse mee! If ever after times should heare
Of our fast-knit affections, though perhaps
The lawes of conscience and of civill use
May justly blame us, yet when they but know
Our loves, that love will wipe away that rigour,
Which would in other incests bee abhorr'd.

70

Give mee your hand: how sweetely life doth runne
In these well-coloured veines! how constantly These palmes doe promise health! But I could chide

75

With nature for this cunning flattery.
Kisse mee againe! — Forgive mee.

Anna. With my heart.

Gio. Farwell!

Anna. Will you begone?

Gio. Be darke, bright sunne,
And make this mid-day night, that thy guilt rayes
May not behold a deed will turne their splendour quarto has require; the quarto at the University of Illinois has require'd.

80

More sooty then the poets faigne their Stix! —
One other kisse, my sister.

Anna. What meanes this?

Gio. To save thy fame, and kill thee in a kisse. Stabs her.

Thus dye, and dye by mee, and by my hand! 85
Revenge is mine; honour doth love command.

Anna. Oh, brother, by your hand!

Gio. When thou art dead
I'll give my reasons for't; for to dispute
With thy — even in thy death — most lovely beauty

Would make mee stagger to performe this act 90
Which I most glory in.

Anna. Forgive him, heaven — and me my sinnes! Farwell.

Brother unkind, unkind — mercy, great heaven!
— Oh! — Oh! Dyes.

Gio. She's dead, alas, good soule! The hap-lesse fruite

That in her wombe receiv'd its life from mee 95
Hath had from mee a cradle and a grave.

I must not dally. This sad marriage-bed
In all her best bore her alive and dead.

Soranzo, thou hast mist thy ayme in this;

I have prevented now thy reaching plots, 100

And kil'd a love for whose each drop of blood
I would have pawn'd my heart. — Fayre Anna-bella,

How over-glorious art thou in thy wounds,
 Tryumphing over infamy and hate! —
 Shrinke not, couragious hand; stand up, my heart, 105
 And boldly act my last and greater part!

Exit with the body.

[SCENA SEXTA. A banqueting room in Soranzo's house.]

A banquet.

Enter Cardinall, Florio, Donado, Soranzo, Richardetto, Vasques, and attendants; they take their places.

Vasques [aside to Soran.]. Remember, sir, what you have to do; be wise and resolute.

Soranzo [aside to Vas.]. Enough: my heart is fix't. — Pleaseth your grace To taste these course confections; though the use

Of such set enterteymments more consists 5
 In custome then in cause, yet, reverend sir,
 I am still made your servant by your presence.

Cardinall. And wee your friend.

Soran. But where's my brother Giovanni?

Enter Giovanni with a heart upon his dagger.

Giovanni. Here, here, Soranzo! trim'd in reeking blood 10

4 course. G-D, coarse.

5 enterteymments. G-D, entertainments.

That tryumphs over death, proud in the spoyle
Of love and vengeance! Fate, or all the powers
That guide the motions of immortall soules,
Could not prevent mee.

Car. What meanes this? 15

Florio. Sonne Giovanni!

Soran. [aside]. Shall I be forestall'd?

Gio. Be not amaz'd: if your misgiving hearts
Shrinke at an idle sight, what bloodlesse feare
Of coward passion would have ceaz'd your sences, 20

Had you beheld the rape of life and beauty
Which I have acted! — My sister, oh, my sister!

Flo. Ha! What of her?

Gio. The glory of my deed Darkned the mid-day sunne, made noone as night.

You came to feast, my lords, with dainty fare : 25
I came to feast too, but I dig'd for food
In a much richer myne then gold or stone
Of any value ballanc't; 'tis a heart,
A heart, my lords, in which is mine intomb'd.
Looke well upon't; d'ee know't? 30

Vas. What strange ridle's this?

Gio. 'Tis Annabella's heart, 'tis; why d'ee startle?

I vow 'tis hers; this daggers poynt plow'd up

Her fruitfull wombe, and left to mee the fame
Of a most glorious executioner. 35

Flo. Why, mad-man, art thy selfe?

Gio. Yes, father, and that times to come may know

How as my fate I honoured my revenge,
List, father, to your eares I will yeeld up
How much I have deserv'd to bee your sonne. 40

Flo. What is't thou say'st?

Gio. Nine moones have had their changes
Since I first throughly view'd and truely lov'd
Your daughter and my sister.

Flo. How! alas, my lords,
Hee's a frantick mad-man!

Gio. Father, no.

For nine moneths space in secret I enjoy'd 45
Sweete Annabella's sheetes; nine moneths I liv'd
A happy monarch of her heart and her.—
Soranzo, thou knows't this: thy paler cheeke
Beares the confounding print of thy disgrace;
For her too fruitfull wombe too soone bewray'd 50
The happy passage of our stolne delights,
And made her mother to a child unborne.

Car. Incestuous villaine!

Flo. Oh, his rage belyes him.

Gio. It does not; 'tis the oracle of truth;
I vow it is so.

Soran. I shall burst with fury. — 55
Bring the strumpet forth!

Vas. I shall, sir. Exit Vas.

Gio. Doe, sir. — Have you all no faith
To credit yet my triumphs? Here I sweare
By all that you call sacred, by the love
I bore my Annabella whil'st she liv'd, 60
These hands have from her bosome ript this heart.

Enter Vas.

Is't true, or no, sir?

Vas. 'Tis most strangely true.

Flo. Cursed man! — have I liv'd to — Dyes.

Car. Hold up Florio!

Monster of children, see what thou hast done —
Broake thy old fathers heart. — Is none of you 65
Dares venter on him?

Gio. Let'em! Oh, my father,
How well his death becomes him in his griefes!
Why this was done with courage. Now survives

None of our house but I, guilt in the blood
Of a fayre sister and a haplesse father. 70

Soran. Inhumane scorne of men, hast thou a thought

T'out live thy murthers?

Gio. Yes, I tell thee, yes:

63 Hold up Florio. G-D puts a comma before Florio.

For in my fists I beare the twists of life.
 Soranzo, see this heart which was thy wives ;
 Thus I exchange it royally for thine, [Stabs him.] 75
 And thus, and thus ! Now brave revenge is mine.

[Soranzo falls.]

Vas. I cannot hold any longer ; you, sir, are you growne insolent in your butcheries ? Have at you ! Fight.

Gio. Come, I am arm'd to meete thee. 80

Vas. No ! will it not be yet ? If this will not, another shall. Not yet ? I shall fitt you anon. — Vengeance !

Enter Bandetti.

Gio. Welcome ! come more of you ; what e're you be,

I dare your worst — [They surround and stab him.] 85
 Oh, I can stand no longer ! Feeble armes
 Have you so soone lost strength ? [Falls.]

Vas. Now you are welcome, sir ! — Away, my maisters, all is done ; shift for your selves,
 your reward is your owne ; shift for your selves. 90

Banditti. Away, away ! Exeunt Bandetti.

Vas. How d'ee, my lord ? See you this ?

[Pointing to Gio.]

How is't ?

Soran. Dead ; but in death well pleased that I have liv'd

To see my wrongs reveng'd on that blacke
 devill. 95

O, Vasques, to thy bosome let mee give
 My last of breath; let not that lecher live. —

Oh! — Dyes.

Vas. The reward of peace and rest be with him, my ever dearest lord and maister! 100

Gio. Whose hand gave mee this wound?

Vas. Mine, sir; I was your first man: have you enough?

Gio. I thanke thee; thou hast done for me
 But what I would have else done on my selfe.
 Ar't sure thy lord is dead?

Vas. Oh, impudent slave, 105
 As sure as I am sure to see the[e] dye!

Car. Thinke on thy life and end, and call for mercy.

Gio. Mercy? why I have found it in this justice.

Car. Strive yet to cry to heaven.

Gio. Oh, I bleed fast!
 Death, thou art a guest long look't for; I embrace 110
 Thee and thy wounds. Oh, my last minute comes!

Where e're I goe, let mee enjoy this grace,
 Freely to view my Annabella's face. Dyes.

Donado. Strange miracle of justice!

Car. Rayse up the citty; wee shall be murdered all!

115

Vas. You neede not feare, you shall not; this strange taske being ended, I have paid the duty to the sonne which I have vowed to the father.

Car. Speake, wretched villaine, what incarnate feind

Hath led thee on to this?

120

Vas. Honesty, and pittie of my maisters wrongs: for know, my lord, I am by birth a Spaniard, brought forth my countrey in my youth by Lord Soranzo's father, whom whil'st he lived I serv'd faithfully; since whose death I have beene to this man as I was to him. What I have done was duty, and I repent nothing, but that the losse of my life had not ransom'd his.

Car. Say, fellow, know'st thou any yet unnam'd

Of counsell in this incest?

130

Vas. Yes, an old woeman, sometimes guardian to this murdered lady.

Car. And what's become of her?

Vas. Within this roome shee is; whose eyes, after her confession, I caus'd to be put out, but kept alive to confirme what from Giovanni's owne mouth you have heard. Now, my lord, what I have done you may judge of, and let your owne wisdom be a judge in your owne reason.

Car. Peace! — First this woeman, chiefe in these effects,

140

My sentence is, that forthwith shee be tane
Out of the citty, for examples sake,
There to be burnt to ashes.

Do. 'Tis most just.

Car. Be it your charge, Donado, see it done.

Do. I shall. 145

Vas. What for mee? If death, 'tis welcome:
I have beene honest to the sonne as I was to the father.

Car. Fellow, for thee, since what thou did'st was done

Not for thy selfe, being no Italian, 150
Wee banish thee for ever; to depart
Within three dayes: in this wee doe dispense
With grounds of reason, not of thine offence.

Vas. 'Tis well: this conquest is mine, and I rejoyce that a Spaniard out-went an Italian in 155 revenge. Exit Vas.

Car. Take up these slaughtered bodies, see them buried;
And all the gold and jewells, or whatsoever,
Confiscate by the canons of the church,
We ceaze upon to the popes proper use. 160

Richardetto [discovers himself]. Your graces pardon: thus long I liv'd disguis'd

To see the effect of pride and lust at once
Brought both to shamefull ends.

Car. What! Richardetto, whom wee thought for dead?

Do. Sir, was it you —

Rich. Your friend.

Car. Wee shall have time 165

To talke at large of all; but never yet
Incest and murther have so strangely met.

Of one so young, so rich in natures store,
Who could not say, 'Tis pittie shee's a whoore?

Exeunt.

FINIS.

The generall commendation deserved by the actors in their presentment of this tragedy may easily excuse such few faults as are escaped in the printing. A common charity may allow him the ability of spelling, whom a secure confidence assures that hee cannot ignorantly erre in the application of sence.

Notes to 'Tis Pity

For the meaning of single words see the Glossary.

3. John, Earle of Peterborough. This nobleman was in favour with both James I and Charles I. He was created Earl of Peterborough by letters patent of March 9, 1627-8. See article in Dictionary of National Biography on Henry Mordaunt, second Earl of Peterborough.

3. first fruities of my leasure. This might refer to the termination of some piece of legal business or even to permanent retirement from the legal profession; but, as Gifford says, "so little of Ford's personal history is known, that no allusion to any circumstance peculiar to himself can be explained."

7, 49. Bononia. The Latin form of Bologna, the seat of the oldest university in Europe.

9, 1. stand to your tackling. Defend yourself.

9, 8-9. Wilt thou to this geere? Do you wish to fight?

11, 50. I should have worm'd you. Gifford says, "The allusion is to the practice of cutting what is called the worm from under a dog's tongue, as a preventive of madness." Cf. "Some of our preachmen are grown dog mad, there's a worm got into their tongues as well as their heads." Familiar Letters of James Howell, II, p. 197, Boston, 1907.

11, 50-51. for running madde. For fear of your running mad.

12, 62. unspleen'd dove. According to popular belief, the dove owed its gentle disposition to its lack of gall. Sir Thomas Browne exposed this "vulgar error" in Pseudodoxia Epidemica, Bk. III, Chap. 3.

14, 125-6. an elder brother . . . coxcomb. Fleay thought these words contained "a personal allusion to Richard Perkins as having acted those parts for the King's Men, and now personating Bergetto for the Queen's." The suggestion is closely associated with his contention that the play was produced about 1626, which has not met with approval.

30, 56. Padua. The seat of the famous university founded in the thirteenth century, and in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries particularly flourishing. Coryat tells us that he was conducted about the city by "two English gentlemen that were then commorant in Padua when I was there, Mr. Moore Doctor of Physicke, and Mr. Willoughby a learned Student in the University." Crudities, vol. 1, p. 299, Glasgow, 1905.

31, 5. Sanazar. Jacopo Sannazaro was born at Naples in 1458, and died in the same city in 1530. The work of his which exerted the widest influence in England was his prose romance, the Arcadia.

32, 13. his briefe Encomium. Gifford quotes a line and a half of this poem, which may be found in Coryat's Crudities, vol. 1, page 302, Glasgow, 1905 :

Viderat Adriacis Venetam Neptunus in undis
Stare urbem, & toto ponere jura mari :
Nunc mihi Tarpeias, quantumvis Juppiter, arces
Objice, & illa tui moenia Martis, ait.
Si pelago Tybrim praefero, urbem aspice utramque,
Illam homines dicas, hanc posuisse Deos.

Coryat says that he heard the poet had a "hundred crownes bestowed upon him," and that he wishes his friend "Mr. Benjamin Johnson were so well rewarded." It is perhaps worth noting that James Howell sends this hexastich with an English translation in a letter to Robert Brown of the Middle Temple from Venice, August 12, 1621. The editions of 1645 and 1650 as well as Miss Repplier's recent edition (Familiar Letters, 1907) differ in several points from Coryat's version. Howell says: "Sannazaro had given him by Saint Mark a hundred zecchins for every one of these verses, which amounts to 300 pounds." Since Ford, as well as Brown, was a member of the Middle Temple, it is of some interest also that Howell announces the sending of a "parcel of Italian books" requested by Brown.

33, 30. foyle to thy unsated change. Must I serve as a dull background to give the zest of contrast to your lust?

36, 107. his woe. The "woe occasioned by his falsehood." G.

39, 5. this borrowed shape. His disguise as physician.

39, 13. common voyce allows hereof. What people in general think of this matter.

41, 41-2. Whether in arts . . . to move affection. An inquiry as to the value of love-potions, charms, etc.

42, 52. Soranzo! what, mine enemy! Gifford notes this passage as a case of forgetfulness on Ford's part: "It is strange that this should appear a new discovery to Grimaldi, when he had been fully apprised of it in the rencontre with Vasques in the first act." As a matter of fact, the information that Soranzo has the father's word and the daughter's heart is given by Florio just after Grimaldi leaves the stage. Grimaldi had reason to know that Soranzo was his rival, but not that he was the accepted lover.

45, 15-17. the f[r]ame and composition . . . body. Cf. "The temperature of the mind follows the temperature of the body; which certain axiom — says that sage prince of philosophers, Aristotle — is evermore infallible." Honour Triumphant: Works of John Ford, III, 359.

69, 8-25. There is a place . . . lawlesse sheets. There seem to be some reminiscences here of Pierce Pennilesse: "A place of horror, stench, and darknesse, where men see meat but can get none, or are ever thirstie, and readie to swelt for drinke, yet have not the power to taste the coole streames that runne hard at their feet . . . he that all his life time was a great fornicator, hath all the diseases of lust continually hanging upon him . . . as so of the rest, as the usurer to swallow moulten gold, the glutton to eat nothing but toades, and the Murtherer to bee still stabd with daggars, but never die." Works of Thomas Nashe, vol. 1, p. 218, London, 1904.

71, 39. Ay mee! "The Italian aimè." Dyce.

83, 76. Troppo sperar, inganna. Excessive hope is deceitful.

83, 90. shee hath yet. There is apparently some defect in the quarto here.

90, 59. Che morte [più] dolce che morire per amore? What death more sweet than to die for love?

90, 63. morendo in gra[z]ia [dee] morire senza dolore. To die in grace [? of God] is to die without grief.

92, 103-4. smother your revenge. On the ethics and legality of deferred revenge in seventeenth-century Italy see the pleadings of the lawyers in The Old Yellow Book (Publication No. 89 of the Carnegie Institution of Washington) edited by Charles W. Hodell, 1908.

95, 179-181. I remembred the proverbe that "where hens . . . sorry houses." Under the date Feb. 5, 1625, Howell writes: "I remember a French proverb

La maison est misérable et médiate

Où la poule plus haut que le coq chante.

That house doth every day more wretched grow

Where the hen louder than the cock doth crow."

Familiar Letters of James Howell, vol. 1, p. 302.

108, 75. I have set up my rest. I have made up my mind.

110, 38. let my hot hare have law. By the rules of sport a hunted animal was allowed a certain time to get the start of his pursuers.

122, 83. Vengeance. The cue for the appearance of the banditti agreed upon in Scene IV of this act.

The Broken Heart

THE TEXT

THE present edition follows the quarto of 1633, which is printed with rather more care than the quarto 'Tis Pity — especially in respect to the arrangement of the lines. As in the case of 'Tis Pity, Dyce noticed some slight variations in the copies which he examined, but nothing of significance. There is no evidence of a second edition of the quarto. The old copy has been compared with the texts of Weber and of Gifford and Dyce. The treatment of this text is identical with that described in the note on 'Tis Pity.

THE BROKEN
HEART.

A Tragedy.

ACTED
By the KING'S Majesties Seruants at the private House in the BLACK-FRIERS.

Fide Honor.

LONDON.

Printed by I. B. for HUGH BEESTON, and are to be sold at his Shop, neere the Castle in Corne-hill 2 6 2 2.

SOURCES

THERE is a hint in the prologue that this play was based on fact, but critics have been obliged to agree with Ward that the "origin of the story on which it is founded is unknown." (A History of English Dramatic Literature, vol. III, page 79.) In the Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, xxiv, 2, pp. 274-85, I have attempted to show that the story Ford had in mind was the affair of Sidney and Penelope Devereux, who was married to Lord Rich and later to Mountjoy, Earl of Devonshire. Hartley Coleridge is the only writer that I know of who has pointed in this direction. In a note at the bottom of page xlv in his introduction to the works of Massinger and Ford he says: "Ford no doubt remembered Mountjoy and his hapless love when he wrote the Broken Heart." This casual suggestion — unknown to me when I worked out my own theory — rightly, I think, connects Lady Rich with the play; but the circumstances attending her earlier love affair tally much better with the situation laid down in the Broken Heart.

TO
THE MOST WORTHY DESERVER
OF
THE NOBLEST TITLES IN HONOUR,
WILLIAM,
LORD CRAVEN, BARON OF HAMSTEED-MARSHALL

My Lord:

The glory of a great name, acquired by a greater glory of action, hath in all ages liv'd the truest chronicle to his owne memory. In the practise of which argument, your growth to perfection, even in youth, hath appear'd so sincere, so un-flattering a penne-man, that posterity 5 cannot with more delight read the merit of noble endeavours then noble endeavours merit thanks from posterity to be read with delight. Many nations, many eyes have beene witnesses of your deserts, and lov'd them: be pleas'd, then, with the freedome of your own nature to admit one 10 amongst all particularly into the list of such as honour a faire example of nobilitie. There is a kinde of humble ambition, not un-commendable, when the silence of study breakes forth into discourse, coveting rather encouragement then applause; yet herein censure commonly is too 15 severe an auditor, without the moderation of an able patronage. I have ever beene slow in courtship of greatnesse, not ignorant of such defects as are frequent to opinion; but Nature. G-D, name — apparently a mistake.

the justice of your inclination to industry emboldens my weaknesse of confidence to relish an experience of your 20 mercy, as many brave dangers have tasted of your courage. Your lordship strove to be knowne to the world, when the world knew you least, by voluntary but excellent attempts: like allowance I plead of being knowne to your lordship, — in this low presumption, — by tending to a 25 favourable entertainment a devotion offered from a heart that can be as truly sensible of any least respect as ever professe the owner in my best, my readiest services, a lover of your naturall love to vertue,

John Ford.

The Sceane.

SPARTA

The speakers names fitted to the qualities.

AMYCLAS, common to the kings of Laconia.

ITHOCLES, Honour of Loveliness, a favourite.

ORGILUS, Angry, sonne to Crotolon.

BASSANES, Vexation, a jealous nobleman.

ARMOSTES, an Appeaser, a counsellor of state.

CROTOLON, Noyse, another counsellor.

PROPHILUS, Deare, friend to Ithocles.

NEARCHUS, Young Prince, Prince of Argos.

TECNICUS, Artist, a philosopher.

[H]EMOPHIL, Glutton }
GRONEAS, Tavernhaunter } two courtiers.

AMELUS, Trusty, friend to Nearchus.

PHULAS, Watchfull, servant to Bassanes.

CALANTHA, Flower of Beauty, the Kings daughter.

PENTHEA, Complaint, sister to Ithocles.

EUPHRANEA, Joy, a maid of honour.

CHRISTALLA, Christall }
PHILEMA, a Kisse } maids of honour.

GRA[U]SIS, Old Beldam, overseer of Penthea.

Persons included.

THRASUS, Fiercenesse, father of Ithocles.

APLOTES, Simplicity, Orgilus so disguis'd.

[Courtiers, Officers, Attendants, &c.]

[H]emophil. Q. Lemophil.

Gra[u]sis. Q. Gransis.

Courtiers . . . &c. Supplied by G-D.

THE PROLOGUE.

*Our scaene is Sparta. He whose best of art
Hath drawne this peece cal's it THE BROKEN
HEART.*

*The title lends no expectation here
Of apish laughter, or of some lame jeere
At place or persons; no pretended clause 5
Of jest's fit for a brothell courts' applause
From vulgar admiration: such low songs,
Tun'd to unchast eares, suit not modest tongues.
The virgine sisters then deserv'd fresh bayes
When innocence and sweetnesse crown'd their layes: 10
Then vices gasp'd for breath, whose whole commerce
Was whip'd to exile by unblushing verse.
This law we keepe in our presentment now,
Not to take freedome more then we allow;
What may be here thought a fiction, when times
youth 15
Wanted some riper yeares, was knowne a truth:
In which, if words have cloath'd the subject right,
You may pertake a pittie with delight.*

The Broken Heart

ACTUS PRIMUS

SCAENA PRIMA. [A room in Crotolon's house.]

Enter Crotolon and Orgilus.

Crotolon. Dally not further; I will know the reason

That speeds thee to this journey.

Orgilus. Reason? good sir,
I can yeeld many.

Crot. Give me one, a good one;
Such I expect, and ere we part must have:
Athens? pray why to Athens? You intend not 5
To kicke against the world, turne Cynic, Stoicke,
Or read the logicke lecture, or become
An Areopagite, and judge in causes
Touching the common-wealth? For, as I take it,
The budding of your chin cannot prognosticate 10
So grave an honour.

Org. All this I acknowledge.

Crot. You doe! then, son, if books and love of knowledge

Enflame you to this travell, here in Sparta
You may as freely study:

Org. 'Tis not that, sir.

Crot. Not that, sir? As a father I command thee 15
To acquaint me with the truth.

Org. Thus I obey 'ee:
After so many quarrels as dissention,
Fury, and rage had broach't in blood, and sometimes

With death to such confederates as sided
With now dead Thrasus and your selfe, my lord, 20
Our present king, Amiclas, reconcil'd
Your eager swords, and seal'd a gentle peace:
Friends you profest your selves, which to con-
firme,

A resolution for a lasting league
Betwixt your families was entertain'd 25
By joyning in a Hymenean bond
Me and the faire Penthea, onely daughter
To Thrasus.

Crot. What of this?

Org. Much, much, deere sir.
A freedome of converse, an enterchange
Of holy and chast love, so fixt our soules 30
In a firme growth of union, that no time
Can eat into the pledge: we had enjoy'd

18 broach't. Q, brauch't; G-D, broach'd.

31 of union. Q, of holy union; but some copies of Q omit holy.
See Dyce's note, Works of John Ford, vol. 1, p. 218.

The sweets our vowes expected, had not cruelty Prevented all those triumphs we prepar'd for
By Thrasus his untimely death.

Crot. Most certaine. 35

Org. From this time sprouted up that poyson-ous stalke

Of aconite whose ripened fruit hath ravisht
All health, all comfort of a happy life.
For Ithocles, her brother, proud of youth,
And prouder in his power, nourisht closely 40
The memory of former discontents,
To glory in revenge. By cunning partly,
Partly by threats, 'a woos at once, and forces
His virtuous sister to admit a marriage
With Basanes, a nobleman, in honour 45
And riches, I confesse, beyond my fortunes.

Crot. All this is no sound reason to importune
My leave for thy departure.

Org. Now it followes.

Beauteous Penthea, wedded to this torture
By an insulting brother, being secretly 50
Compeld to yeeld her virgine freedome up
To him who never can usurpe her heart,
Before contracted mine, is now so yoak'd
To a most barbarous thraldome, misery,
Affliction, that he savors not humanity, 55
Whose sorrow melts not into more then pittie
In hearing but her name.

Crot. As how, pray?

Org. Bassanes,
The man that calls her wife, considers truly
What heaven of perfection he is lord of
By thinking faire Penthea his: this thought 60
Begets a kinde of monster-love, which love
Is nurse unto a feare so strong and servile
As brands all dotage with a jealousie.
All eyes who gaze upon that shrine of beauty
He doth resolve doe homage to the miracle; 65
Some one, he is assur'd, may now or then,
If opportunity but sort, prevaile:
So much out of a selfe-unworthinesse
His feares transport him; not that he findes cause
In her obedience, but his owne distrust. 70

Crot. You spin out your discourse.

Org. My griefs are violente:
For knowing how the maid was heretofore
Courtred by me, his jealousies grow wild
That I should steale again into her favours,
And undermine her vertues; which the gods 75 Know I nor dare nor dreame of. Hence, from hence

I undertake a voluntary exile.
First, by my absence to take off the cares
Of jealous Bassanes; but chiefly, sir,
To free Penthea from a hell on earth; 80

Lastly, to lose the memory of something
Her presence makes to live in me afresh.

Crot. Enough, my Orgilus, enough. To Athens
I give a full consent. — Alas, good lady! —
Wee shall heare from thee often?

Org. Often.

Crot. See, 85

Thy sister comes to give a farewell.

Enter Euphrania.

Euphranea. Brother!

Org. Euphrania, thus upon thy cheekes I print

A brothers kisse; more carefull of thine honour,
Thy health, and thy well-doing, then my life.

Before we part, in presence of our father, 90
I must preferre a suit to 'ee.

Euphr. You may stile it,
My brother, a command.

Org. That you will promise
To passe never to any man, how ever
Worthy, your faith, till, with our fathers leave,
I give a free consent.

Crot. An easie motion! 95
I'll promise for her, Orgilus.

Org. Your pardon;
Euphrania's oath must yeeld me satisfaction.

93 To passe never. G-D, Never to pass.

94 Worthy. Q prints at end of preceding line.

Euphr. By Vesta's sacred fires I sweare.

Crot. And I,
By great Apollo's beames, joyne in the vow,
Not without thy allowance to bestow her 100
On any living.

Org. Deere Euphrania, Mistake me not: farre, farre 'tis from my
thought,
As farre from any wish of mine, to hinder
Preferment to an honourable bed
Or fitting fortune; thou art young and handsome; 105

And 'twere injustice, — more, a tyrannie, —
Not to advance thy merit. Trust me, sister,
It shall be my first care to see thee match'd
As may become thy choyce, and our contents:
I have your oath.

Euphr. You have: but meane you,
brother, 110
To leave us as you say?

Crot. I, I, Euphrania:
He has just grounds direct him. I will prove
A father and a brother to thee.

Euphr. Heaven
Does looke into the secrets of all hearts:
Gods, you have mercy with 'ee, else —

Crot. Doubt nothing; 115
Thy brother will returne in safety to us.

Org. Soules sunke in sorrowes never are without 'em ;
They change fresh ayres, but beare their griefes about 'em. Exeunt omnes.

SCAENE 2. [A room in the palace.]

Flourish. Enter Amyclas the King, Armostes, Propbilus, and attendants.

Amyclas. The Spartane gods are gracious ; our humility
Shall bend before their altars, and perfume
Their temples with abundant sacrifice.
See, lords, Amyclas, your old King, is entring
Into his youth againe ! I shall shake off
This silver badge of age, and change this snow
For haire as gay as are Apollo's lockes ;
Our heart leaps in new vigour.

Armostes. May old time
Run backe to double your long life, great sir !

Amy. It will, it must, Armostes: thy bold
nephew,
Death-braving Ithocles, brings to our gates
Triumphs and peace upon his conquering sword.
Laconia is a monarchy at length ;
Hath in this latter warre trod underfoot
*Messen*es pride ; Messene bowes her necke
To *Lacedemon*s royalty. O, 'twas

5

10

15

A glorious victory, and doth deserve
 More then a chronicle ; a temple, lords,
 A temple to the name of Ithocles !
 Where didst thou leave him, Prophilus ?

Prophilus. At Pephon, 20

Most gracious soveraigne ; twenty of the noblest
 Of the Messenians there attend your pleasure
 For such conditions as you shall propose,
 In setling peace, and liberty of life.

Amy. When comes your friend the general ?

Proph. He promis'd 25

To follow with all speed convenient.

Enter Crotolon, Calantha, Chrystalla, Philema and Euphrania.

Amy. Our daughter ! — Deere Calantha, the happy newes,

The conquest of Messene, hath already Enrich'd thy knowledge.

Calantha. With the circumstance

And manner of the fight, related faithfully 30

By Prophilus himselfe ; but, pray, sir, tell me,

How doth the youthfull generall demeane

His actions in these fortunes ?

Proph. Excellent princesse,

Your owne faire eyes may soone report a truth

Unto your judgement, with what moderation, 35

Calmenesse of nature, measure, bounds and limits

Of thankfulnessse and joy, 'a doth digest

Such amplitude of his successes as would
 In others, moulded of a spirit less clear,
 Advance 'em to comparison with heaven. 40
 But Ithocles —

Cal. Your friend —

Proph. He is so, madam,
 In which the period of my fate consists :
 He in this firmament of honour, stands
 Like a starre fixt, not mov'd with any thunder
 Of popular applause or sudden lightning 45
 Of selfe-opinion. He hath serv'd his country,
 And thinks 'twas but his duty.

Crot. You describe
 A miracle of man.

Amy. Such, Crotolon,
 On forfeit of a kings word, thou wilt finde him.
 Harke, warning of his coming! all attend him. 50

Flourish. Enter Ithocles, Hemophill, and Groneas;
 the rest of the lords ushering him in.

Amy. Returne into these armes, thy home, thy sanctuary,
 Delight of Sparta, treasure of my bosome,
 Mine owne, owne Ithocles!

Ithocles. Your humblest subject.

Armo. Proud of the blood I claime an interest in
 As brother to thy mother, I embrace thee 55
 Right noble nephew.

Itho. Sir, your love's too partiall.

Crot. Our country speakes by me, who by thy valour,

Wisdome, and service, shares in this great action ;
Returning thee, in part of thy due merits,
A generall welcom.

Itho. You exceed in bounty. 60

Cal. Chrystalla, Philena, the chaplet ! — Itho-
cles,

Upon the wings of fame the singular
And chosen fortune of an high attempt
Is borne so past the view of common sight,
That I my selfe with mine owne hands have wrought, 65

To crowne thy temples, this provinciall garland;
Accept, weare, and enjoy it, as our gift
Deserv'd, not purchas'd.

Itho. Y'are a royall mayd.

Amy. Shee is in all our daughter.

Itho. Let me blush,
Acknowledging how poorely I have serv'd, 70
What nothings I have done, compar'd with th'
honours

Heap'd on the issue of a willing minde ;
In that lay mine ability, that onely.
For who is he so sluggish from his birth,
So little worthy of a name or country, 75
That owes not out of gratitude for life,

A debt of service, in what kinde soever
 Safety or counsaile of the common-wealth
 Requires for paiment ?

Cal. 'A speaks truth.

Itbo. Whom heaven

Is pleas'd to stile victorious, there to such 80
 Applause runs madding, like the drunken priests
 In Bacchus sacrifices, without reason
 Voycing the leader-on a demi-god :
 When as, indeed, each common souldiers blood
 Drops downe as current coyne in that hard purchase 85

As his whose much more delicate condition
 Hath suckt the milke of ease. Judgement commands,

But resolution executes : I use not,
 Before this royall presence, these fit sleights
 As in contempt of such as can direct : 90

My speech hath other end : not to attribute
 All praise to one mans fortune, which is strengthened

By many hands. — For instance, here is Pro-
 philus,

A gentleman — I cannot flatter truth —
 Of much desert ; and, though in other ranke, 95
 Both Hemophil and Groneas were not missing
 To wish their countries peace ; for, in a word,

All there did strive their best, and 't was our duty.

Amy. Courtiers turne souldiers? — We vouchsafe our hand :

Observe your great example.

Hemophil. With all diligence. 100

Groneas. Obsequiously and hourelly.

Amy. Some repose

After these toyles [is] needfull; we must thinke on

Conditions for the conquered ; they expect 'em.

On, — come my Ithocles.

Euphr. Sir, with your favour,

I need not a supporter.

Propb. Fate instructs me. 105

Exeunt. Manent Hemophil, Groneas, Christalla et Philema.

Hemophil staves Chrystalla ; Groneas, Philema.

Christalla. With me ?

Philema. Indeed I dare not stay.

Hem. Sweet lady,

Souldiers are blunt, — your lip.

Chris. Fye, this is rudenesse ;

You went not hence such creatures.

Gron. Spirit of valour

Is of a mounting nature.

Phil. It appeares so :

Pray, in earnest, how many men apeece 110
Have you two beene the death of?

Gron. Faith, not many;

We were compos'd of mercy.

Hem. For our daring

You heard the generals approbation
Before the king.

Chris. You wish'd your countries peace:
That shew'd your charity; where are your spoyles, 115

Such as the souldier fights for?

Phil. They are comming.

Chris. By the next carrier, are they not?

Gron. Sweet Philena,

When I was in the thickest of mine enemies,
Slashing off one mans head, anothers nose,
Anothers armes and legs —

Phil. And altogether. 120

Gron. Then would I with a sigh remember
thee,

And cry, “Deare Philena, ’tis for thy sake
I doe these deeds of wonder!” — dost not love me
With all thy heart now?

Phil. Now as heretofore.

I have not put my love to use; the principall 125
Will hardly yeeld an interest.

110 Pray, in earnest, how. G-D, In earnest, pray, how.
G, Pray [now] in earnest, how.

Gron. By Mars,
I'le marry thee!

Phil. By Vulcan, y'are forsworne,
Except my mind doe alter strangely.

Gron. One word.

Chris. You lye beyond all modesty,— for-beare me.

Hem. I'le make thee mistresse of a city;
't is 130

Mine owne by conquest.

Chris. By petition; sue for't
In forma pauperis. — City! kennell. — Gallants!
Off with your feathers, put on aprons, gallants;
Learne to reele, thrum, or trim a ladies dog,
And be good quiet soules of peace, hobgoblins! 135

Hem. Christalla!

Chris. Practise to drill hogs, in hope
To share in the acorns. Souldiers! Corn-cutters,
But not so valiant; they oft-times draw blood,
Which you durst never doe. When you have practis'd

More wit, or more civility, wee'll ranke 'ee 140
I'th list of men: till then, brave things at armes,
Dare not to speake to us, — most potent
Groncas —

Phil. And Hemophill the hardy, — at your services.

133 feathers. Q, fathers; G-D, feathers.

Gron. They scorne us as they did before we went.

Hem. Hang 'em, let us scorne them and be reveng'd. Exeunt Chri. et Philema. 145

Gron. Shall we ?

Hem. We will ; and when we sleight them thus,

Instead of following them, they'll follow us.
It is a womans nature.

Gron. 'Tis a scurvy one.
Exeunt omnes.

SCENE 3. [The gardens of the palace. A grove.]

Enter Tecnicus a philosopher, and Orgilus disguised like a scholler of his.

Tecnicus. Tempt not the stars, young man, thou canst not play

With the severity of fate : this change
Of habit and disguise in outward view,
Hides not the secrets of thy soule within thee,
From their quicke-piercing eyes, which dive at all times

Downe to thy thoughts : in thy aspect I note
A consequence of danger.

Orgilus. Give me leave,
Grave Tecnicus, without fore-dooming destiny,
Under thy roofe to ease my silent griefes
By applying to my hidden wounds the balme

5

10

Of thy oraculous lectures: if my fortune
 Run such a crooked by-way as to wrest
 My steps to ruine, yet thy learned precepts
 Shall call me backe, and set my footings streight:
 I will not court the world.

Tecn. Ah, Orgilus, 15
 Neglects in young men of delights and life
 Run often to extremities; they care not
 For harmes to others who contemne their owne.

Org. But I, most learned artist, am not so much
 At ods with nature that I grutch the thrift 20
 Of any true deserver; nor doth malice
 Of present hopes so checke them with despaire,
 As that I yeeld to thought of more affliction
 Then what is incident to frailty: wherefore
 Impute not this retired course of living 25
 Some little time to any other cause
 Then what I justly render: the information
 Of an unsetled minde; as the effect
 Must clearely wnesse.

Tecn. Spirit of truth inspire thee!
 On these conditions I conceale thy change, 30
 And willingly admit thee for an auditor.
 I'le to my study.

Org. I to contemplations:
 In these delightfull walkes. [Exit. Tecn.]—
 Thus metamorphiz'd,

I may without suspition hearken after
 Pentheas usage and Euphranias faith. 35

Love! Thou art full of mystery: the deities Themselves are not secure in searching out
 The secrets of those flames which hidden wast
 A breast made tributary to the lawes
 Of beauty. Physicke yet hath never found 40
 A remedy to cure a lovers wound.

Ha! who are those that crosse yon private walke
 Into the shadowing grove in amorous foldings?

Prophilus passeth over, supporting Euphrania, and whispering.

My sister! O, my sister! 'tis Euphrania
 With Prophilus: supported too; I would 45
 It were an apparition! Prophilus
 Is Ithocles his friend; it strangely pusles me.
 Againe! Helpe me, my booke; this schollers habit
 Must stand my privilege: my mind is busie;
 Mine eyes and eares are open.

Walke by, reading.

Enter againe Prophilus and Euphrania.

Prophilus. Doe not wast 50
 The span of this stolne time, lent by the gods
 For precious use, in nicenesse! Bright Euphranea,

Should I repeat old vowes, or study new,
 For purchase of beleefe to my desires —

Org. [aside]. Desires?

Proph. My service, my integrity — 55

Org. [aside]. That's better.

Proph. I should but repeat a lesson
Oft conn'd without a prompter but thine eyes :
My love is honourable —

Org. [aside]. So was mine
To my Penthea: chastly honourable.

Proph. Nor wants there more addition to my wish 60

Of happinesse then having thee a wife ;
Already sure of Ithocles, a friend
Firme and un-alterable.

Org. [aside]. But a brother
More cruell then the grave.

Euphranea. What can you looke for
In answer to your noble protestations, 65
From an unskilfull mayd, but language suited
To a divided minde ?

Org. [aside]. Hold out, Euphranea!

Euphr. Know, Prophilus, I never undervalued,
From the first time you mentioned worthy love,
Your merit, meanes, or person. It had beene 70
A fault of judgement in me, and a dulnesse
In my affections, not to weigh and thanke
My better starres that offered me the grace
Of so much blisfulnesse. For, to speake truth,
The law of my desires kept equall pace 75

With yours, nor have I left that resolution ;
 But onely, in a word, what-ever choyce
 Lives nearest in my heart must first procure
 Consent both from my father and my brother,
 E're he can owne me his.

Org. [aside]. She is forsworne else. 80

Proph. Leave me that taske.

Euphr. My brother, e're he parted
 To Athens, had my oath.

Org. [aside]. Yes, yes, 'a had sure.

Proph. I doubt not, with the meanes the court supplies,

But to prevaile at pleasure.

Org. [aside]. Very likely !

Proph. Meane time, best, dearest, I may build my hopes 85

On the foundation of thy constant suffrance
 In any opposition.

Euphr. Death shall sooner
 Divorce life and the joyes I have in living
 Then my chast vowes from truth.

Proph. On thy faire hand
 I seale the like.

Org. [aside]. There is no faith in woman— 90
 Passion, O, be contain'd ! my very heart-strings
 Are on the tenters.

Euphr. Sir, we are over-heard,

Cupid protect us! 'twas a stirring, sir,
Of some one neere.

Proph. Your feares are needlesse, lady ;
None have accesse into these private pleasures 95
Except some neere in court, or bosome student
From Tecnicus his oratory, granted
By speciall favour lately from the king
Unto the grave philosopher.

Euphr. Me thinkes
I heare one talking to himselfe: I see him. 100

Proph. 'Tis a poore scholler, as I told you,
lady.

Org. [aside]. I am discovered. — [As if thinking aloud.] Say it: is it possible
With a smooth tongue, a leering countenance,
Flattery, or force of reason — I come t'ee, sir —
To turne or to appease the raging sea? 105
Answer to that. — Your art! what art? to catch
And hold fast in a net the sunnes small atomes?
No, no; they'll out, they'll out: ye may as easily
Out run a cloud driven by a northerne blast,
As fiddle faddle so! Peace, or speake sense. 110

Euphr. Call you this thing a scholler? 'las hee's lunaticke.

Proph. Observe him, sweet; 'tis but his recreation.

Org. But will you heare a little! You are so teatchy,

You keepe no rule in argument. Philosophy
 Workes not upon impossibilities, 115
 But naturall conclusions. — Mew! — absurd!
 The metaphysicks are but speculations
 Of the celestiall bodies, or such accidents
 As not mixt perfectly, in the ayre ingendred,
 Appeare to us unnaturall; that's all. 120
 Prove it; — yet, with a reverence to your gravity,
 I'le baulke illiterate sawcinesse, submitting
 My sole opinion to the touch of writers.

Proph. Now let us fall in with him.

Org.

Ha, ha, ha!

These apish boyes, when they but tast the grammates 125
 And principals of theory, imagine
 They can oppose their teachers. Confidence Leads many into errors.

Proph. By your leave, sir.

Euphr. Are you a scholler, friend?

Org.

I am, gay creature,

With pardon of your deities, a mushrome 130
 On whom the dew of heaven drops now and then;
 The sunne shines on me too, I thanke his beames!
 Sometime I feele their warmth; and eat, and sleepe.

Proph. Does Tecnicus read to thee?

Org. Yes, forsooth,
He is my master surely ; yonder dore 135
Opens upon his study.

Proph. Happy creatures !
Such people toyle not, sweet, in heats of state,
Nor sinke in thawes of greatnesse : their affections
Keepe order with the limits of their modesty ;
Their love is love of vertue. — What's thy name ? 140

Org. Aplotes, sumptuous master, a poore wretch.

Euphr. Dost thou want any thing ?

Org. Books, Venus, books.

Proph. Lady, a new conceit comes in my thought,

And most availeable for both our comforts.

Euphr. My lord, —

Proph. Whiles I endeavour to deserve 145
Your fathers blessing to our loves, this scholler
May daily at some certaine houres attend,
What notice I can write of my successe,
Here in this grove, and give it to your hands :
The like from you to me : so can we never, 150
Barr'd of our mutuall speech, want sure intelligence ;
And thus our hearts may talke when our tongues cannot.

Euphr. Occasion is most favourable; use it.

Proph. Aplotes, wilt thou wait us twice a day,
At nine i' th morning and at foure at night, 155
Here in this bower, to convey such letters
As each shall send to other? Doe it willingly, Safely, and secretly, and I will furnish
Thy study, or what else thou canst desire.

Org. Jove, make me thankfull, thankfull, I beseech thee, 160
Propitious Jove! I will prove sure and trusty:
You will not faile me bookes?

Proph. Nor ought besides Thy heart can wish. This ladies name's Euphranea,
Mine Prophilus.

Org. I have a pretty memory:
It must prove my best friend. — I will not misse 165
One minute of the houres appointed.

Proph. Write
The bookes thou wouldst have brought thee in a note,
Or take thy selfe some money.

Org. No, no money:
Money to schollers is a spirit invisible,
We dare not finger it; or bookes, or nothing. 170

Proph. Bookes of what sort thou wilt: doe not forget
Our names.

Org. I warrant 'ee, I warrant 'ee.

Proph. Smile, Hymen, on the growth of our desires ;

Wee'll feed thy torches with eternall fires!

Excunt, manet Org.

Org. Put out thy torches, Hymen, or their light

175

Shall meet a darkenesse of eternall night.

Inspire me, Mercury, with swift deceits ;

Ingenious fate has lept into mine armes,

Beyond the compasse of my braine. — Mortality

Creeps on the dung of earth, and cannot reach 180

The riddles which are purpos'd by the gods.

Great arts best write themselves in their owne stories ;

They dye too basely who out-live their glories.

Exit.

ACTUS SECUNDUS: SCAENA PRIMA.

[A room in Bassanes' house.]

Enter Bassanes and Phulas.

Bassanes. I'le have that window next the street dam'd up ;

It gives too full a prospect to temptation,
And courts a gazers glances : there's a lust
Committed by the eye, that sweats and travels,
Plots, wakes, contrives, till the deformed bear-whelp

5

Adultery be lick'd into the act,
The very act : that light shall be dam'd up ;
D'ee heare, sir ?

Phulas. I doe heare, my lord ; a mason
Shall be provided suddenly.

Bass. Some rogue,
Some rogue of your confederacy, — factor
For slaves and strumpets, — to convey close packets

10

From this spruce springall and the tother youngster ;

That gawdy eare-wrig, or my lord your patron,
Whose pensioner you are. — I'le teare thy throat
out,

Sonne of a cat, ill-looking hounds-head ; rip up 15

Thy ulcerous maw, if I but scent a paper,
 A scroll, but halfe as big as what can cover
 A wart upon thy nose, a spot, a pimple,
 Directed to my lady : it may prove
 A mysticall preparative to lewdnesse. 20

Phul. Care shall be had. — I will turne every thread

About me to an eye. — [Aside.] Here 's a sweet
 life !

Bass. The city houswives, cunning in the traffique

Of chamber-merchandise, set all at price
 By whole-sale ; yet they wipe their mouthes, and simper, 25

Cull, kisse, and cry “Sweet-hart,” and stroake
 the head

Which they have branch'd ; and all is well
 againe !

Dull clods of dirt, who dare not feele the rubs
 Stucke on the fore-heads ?

Phul. 'Tis a villanous world,
 One cannot hold his owne in't.

Bass. Dames at court, 30
 Who flaunt in riots, runne another byas :
 Their pleasure heaves the patient asse that suffers

Up on the stilts of office, titles, incomes ;
 Promotion justifies the shame, and sues for't.

Poore honour! thou art stab'd and bleed'st to death 35

By such unlawfull hire. The country mistresse
 Is yet more wary, and in blushes hides
 What ever trespasse drawes her troth to guilt;
 But all are false. On this truth I am bold,
 No woman but can fall, and doth, or would — 40
 Now for the newest newes about the citie;
 What blab the voyces, sirrha?

Phul. O, my lord,
 The rarest, quaintest, strangest, tickling newes
 That ever —

Bass. Hey da! up and ride me, rascall!
 What is 't?

Phul. Forsooth, they say, the king has mew'd 45
 All his gray beard, instead of which is budded
 Another of a pure carnation colour,
 Speckled with greene and russet.

Bass. Ignorant blocke!

Phul. Yes truly; and 'tis talkt about the streets,

That since Lord Ithocles came home, the lyons 50
 Never left roaring, at which noyse the beares
 Have danc'd their very hearts out.

Bass. Dance out thine too.

Phul. Besides, Lord Orgilus is fled to Athens
 Upon a fiery dragon, and 'tis thought
 A' never can returne.

Bass. Grant it, Apollo! 55

Phul. Moreover, please your lordship, 'tis reported

For certaine, that who ever is found jealous
Without apparant prooffe that's wife is wanton
Shall be divorc'd: but this is but she-newes;
I had it from a midwife. I have more yet. 60

Bass. Anticke, no more! Ideots and stupid fooles

Grate my calamities. Why to be faire
Should yeeld presumption of a faulty soule?
Looke to the doores.

Phul. [aside]. The horne of plenty crest him.
Exit Phul.

Bass. Swormes of confusion huddle in my thoughts 65

In rare distemper. Beauty! O, it is An unmatcht blessing or a horrid curse.

Enter Penthea and Grauis, an old lady.

Shee comes, she comes! so shoots the morning
forth,

Spangled with pearles of transparent dew.
The way to poverty is to be rich; 70
As I in her am wealthy, but for her
In all contents a bankrupt. — Lov'd Penthea!
How fares my hearts best joy?

Grauis. Insooth, not well,
She is so over-sad.

Bass. Leave chattering, mag-pye. —
 Thy brother is return'd, sweet, safe and honour'd 75
 With a triumphant victory; thou shalt visit him:
 We will to court, where, if it be thy pleasure,
 Thou shalt appeare in such a ravishing lustre
 Of jewels above value, that the dames
 Who brave it there, in rage to be out-shin'd, 80
 Shall hide them in their closets, and unseene
 Fret in their teares; whiles every wondring eye Shall crave none other brightnesse but thy presence.

Choose thine owne recreations; be a queene
 Of what delights thou fanciest best, what company, 85
 What place, what times; doe any thing, doe all things
 Youth can command; so thou wilt chase these clouds
 From the pure firmament of thy faire lookes.

Grau. Now 'tis well said, my lord. What,
 lady! laugh,
 Be merry; time is precious.

Bass. Furies whip thee! 90
Penthea. Alas, my lord, this language to your hand-maid

Sounds as would musicke to the deafe; I need
 No braveries nor cost of art to draw

The whitenesse of my name into offence ;
 Let such, if any such there are, who covet 95
 A curiosity of admiration,
 By laying out their plenty to full view,
 Appaere in gawdy out-sides ; my attires
 Shall suit the inward fashion of my minde ;
 From which, if your opinion nobly plac'd, 100
 Change not the livory your words bestow,
 My fortunes with my hopes are at the highest.

Bass. This house, me thinkes, stands somewhat too much inward,
 It is too melancholy ; wee' ll remove
 Nearer the court : or what thinks my Penthea 105
 Of the delightfull island we command ?
 Rule me as thou canst wish.

Pen. I am no mistresse ;
 Whither you please, I must attend ; all wayes
 Are alike pleasant to me.

Grau. Island ! prison ;
 A prison is as gaysome : wee' ll no islands : 110
 Marry, out upon 'em ! whom shall we see there ?
 Sea-guls and porpiscis and water-rats
 And crabs and mewes and dogfish ! goodly geere
 For a young ladies dealing, or an old ones !
 On no termes islands ; I'le be stew'd first.

Bass. [aside to Grau.]. Grauis, 115
 You are a jugling bawd. — This sadnesse, sweetest,

Becomes not youthfull blood. — [Aside to Grau.]

I'le have you pounded. —

For my sake put on a more chearefull mirth;
Thou't marre thy cheekes, and make me old in griefes. —

[Aside to Grau.] Damnable bitch-foxe!

Grau. I am thicke of hearing ¹²⁰

Still, when the wind blowes southerly. What thinke'ee,

If your fresh lady breed young bones, my lord?
Wood not a chopping boy d'ee good at heart?
But, as you said —

Bass. [aside to Grau.]. I'le spit thee on a stake,

Or chop thee into collops!

Grau. Pray, speake louder. ¹²⁵

Sure, sure, the wind blowes south still.

Pen. Thou prat'st madly.

Bass. 'Tis very hot; I sweat extreemely. —
Now?

[Re-] Enter Phulas.

Phul. A heard of lords, sir.

Bass. Ha?

Phul. A flock of ladies.

Bass. Where?

Phul. Shoalds of horses.

Bass. Peasant, how?

Phul. Caroches

In drifts — th' one enter, th' other stand without, sir.

130

And now I vanish.

Exit Phulas.

Enter Prophilus, Hemophil, Groncas, Chriſtalla and Philena.

Prophilus.

Noble Bassanes!

Bass. Most welcome Prophilus, ladies, gentlemen;

To all my heart is open; you all honour me, —
[Aside.] A tympany swels in my head already, —

Honour me bountifully. — [Aside.] How they flutter,

135

Wagtailes and jayes together!

Proph.

From your brother,

By virtue of your love to him, I require

Your instant presence, fairest.

Pen.

He is well, sir?

Proph. The gods preserve him ever: yet, deare beauty,

I finde some alteration in him lately,

140

Since his returne to Sparta. — My good lord,

I pray use no delay.

Bass.

We had not needed

An invitation, if his sisters health

Had not fallen into question. — Hast, Penthea,

Slacke not a minute: lead the way, good Prophilus;

I'll follow step by step.

Proph. Your arme, faire madam.

Exeunt omnes sed Bass. & Grau.

Bass. One word with your old bawdship: th'
hadst bin better

Raild at the sinnes thou worshipst then have thwarted

My will: I'le use thee cursedly.

Grau. You dote,

You are beside yourselfe. A politician 150

In jealousie? No, y'are too grosse, too vulgar.

Pish, teach not me my trade; I know my cue:

My crossing you sinks me into her trust,

By which I shall know all: my trade's a sure one.

Bass. Forgive me, Grausis, twas consideration 155

I rellisht not; but have a care now.

Grau. Feare not,

I am no new-come-too't.

Bass. Thy life's upon it,

And so is mine. My agonies are infinite.

Exeunt omnes.

SCAENE 2. [The palace. Ithocles' apartment.]

Enter Ithocles alone.

Ithocles. Ambition! 'tis of vipers breed; it knaues

A passage through the wombe that gave it motion.

Ambition, like a seeled dove, mounts upward,
 Higher and higher still to perch on clouds,
 But tumbles headlong downe with heavier ruine. 5
 So squibs and crackers flye into the ayre,
 Then, onely breaking with a noyse, they vanish
 In stench and smoke. Morality appli'd
 To timely practice keeps the soule in tune,
 At whose sweet musicke all our actions dance : 10
 But this is forme of books and schoole-tradition ;

It physicks not the sicknesse of a minde
 Broken with griefes : strong feavers are not eas'd
 With counsell, but with best receipts and meanes :

Meanes, speedy meanes and certaine ; that's the cure. 15

Enter Armostes and Crotolon.

Armostes. You sticke, Lord Crotolon, upon a point

Too nice and too unnecessary. Prophilus
 Is every way desertfull. I am confident
 Your wisdom is too ripe to need instruction
 From your sonnes tutillage.

Crotolon.

Yet not so ripe, 20

My Lord Armostes, that it dares to dote
 Upon the painted meat of smooth perswasion,
 Which tempts me to a breach of faith.

Itbo.

Not yet

Resolv'd, my lord? Why, if your sonnes consent
 Be so availeable, wee'll write to Athens 25
 For his repaire to Sparta. The kings hand Will joyne with our desires; he has beene mov'd too't.

Armo. Yes, and the king himselfe importun'd
 Crotolon

For a dispatch.

Crot. Kings may command; their wils
 Are lawes not to be questioned.

Itho. By this marriage 30
 You knit an union so devout, so hearty,
 Betweene your loves to me and mine to yours,
 As if mine owne blood had an interest in it;
 For Prophilus is mine, and I am his.

Crot. My lord, my lord! —

Itho. What, good sir? speak your thoght. 35

Crot. Had this sincerity beene reall once,
 My Orgilus had not beene now un-wiv'd,
 Nor your lost sister buried in a bride-bed:
 Your unckle here, Armostes, knowes this truth;
 For had your father Thrasus liv'd, — but peace 40
 Dwell in his grave! I have done.

Armo. Y'are bold and bitter.

Itho. 'A presses home the injury; it smarts:
 No reprehensions, unckle, I deserve 'em.
 Yet, gentle sir, consider what the heat
 Of an unsteady youth, a giddy braine, 45

Greene indiscretion, flattery of greatnesse,
 Rawnesse of judgement, wilfulnesse in folly,
 Thoughts vagrant as the wind, and as uncertaine,
 Might lead a boy in yeeres too: 'twas a fault,
 A capitall fault; for then I could not dive 50
 Into the secrets of commanding love:

Since when, experience, by the extremities in others,

Hath forc'd me to collect, and, trust me, Crot-olon,

I will redeeme those wrongs with any service
 Your satisfaction can require for currant. 55

Armo. Thy acknowledgement is satisfaction.
 What would you more?

Crot. I'me conquer'd: if Euphrania
 Her selfe admit the motion, let it be so.
 I doubt not my sonnes liking.

Itho. Use my fortunes,
 Life, power, sword, and heart, all are your owne. 60

Enter Bassanes, Prophilus, Calantha, Penthea, Euphranea, Chrystalla, Philema, and Grausis.

Armo. The princessse with your sister.

Calantha. I present 'ee
 A stranger here in court, my lord; for did not Desire of seeing you draw her abroad,
 We had not beene made happy in her company.

52 the extremities. G-D, th' extremes.

56 Thy acknowledgement. G-D, Th' acknowledgment.

Itho. You are a gracious princesse. — Sister, wedlocke 65

Holds too severe a passion in your nature,
Which can engrosse all duty to your husband,
Without attendance on so deare a mistresse.
'Tis not my brothers pleasure, I presume,
T' immure her in a chamber.

Bassanes. 'Tis her will ; 70

Shee governes her owne houres. Noble Ithocles,
We thanke the gods for your successe and welfare.
Our lady has of late beene indispos'd,
Else we had waited on you with the first.

Itho. How does Penthea now ?

Penthea. You best know, brother, 75
From whom my health and comforts are deriv'd.

Bass. [aside]. I like the answer well : 'tis sad and modest.

There may be tricks yet, tricks. — Have an eye, Grausis !

Cal. Now, Crotolon, the suit we joyn'd in must not

Fall by too long demurre.

Crot. 'Tis granted, princesse, 80

For my part.

Armo. With condition, that his sonne
Favour the contract.

Cal. Such delay is easie.

The joyes of marriage make thee, Prophilus,

A proud deserver of Euphrania's love,
And her of thy desert.

Proph. Most sweetly gracious! 85

Bass. The joyes of marriage are the heaven on earth,

Life's paradise, great princesse, the soules quiet,
Sinewes of concord, earthly immortality,
Eternity of pleasures; no restoratives
Like to a constant woman!—[Aside.] But where is she? 90

'Twould puzzle all the gods but to create
Such a new monster. — I can speake by prooffe,
For I rest in Elizium; 'tis my happinesse.

Crot. Euphrania, how are you resolv'd, speake freely,

In your affections to this gentleman? 95

Euphranea. Nor more nor lesse then as his love assures me,

Which, if your liking with my brothers warrants,
I cannot but approve in all points worthy.

Crot. So, so, I know your answer.

Itho. 'T had bin pittie
To sunder hearts so equally consented. 100

Enter Hemophil.

Hemophil. The king, Lord Ithocles, commands your presence;
And, fairest princesse, yours.

Cal. We will attend him.

Enter Groncas.

Groncas. Where are the lords? All must unto the king

Without delay: the Prince of Argos —

Cal. Well, sir.

Gron. Is coming to the court, sweet lady.

Cal. How! 105

The Prince of Argos?

Gron. 'Twas my fortune, madam,
T' enjoy the honour of these happy tidings.

Itho. Penthea!

Pen. Brother!

Itho. Let me an howre hence
Meet you alone within the palace grove;
I have some secret with you. — Prethe, friend, 110
Conduct her thither, and have special care
The walks be clear'd of any to disturbe us.

Proph. I shall.

Bass. How's that?

Itho. Alone, pray be alone. —
I am your creature, princess. — On, my lords!

Exeunt [except Bassanes.]

Bassanes.

Bass. Alone! alone! what meanes that word “alone”?

115

Why might not I be there? — hum! — hee's
her brother;

Brothers and sisters are but flesh and blood,

And this same whorson court ease is temptation
 To a rebellion in the veines. — Besides,
 His fine friend Prophilus must be her guardian. 120
 Why may not he dispatch a businesse nimbly
 Before the other come? — or — pandring, pandring
 For one another, bee't to sister, mother, Wife, couzen, any thing, 'mongst youths of mettall
 Is in request. It is so — stubborne fate : 125
 But if I be a cuckold, and can know it,
 I will be fell, and fell.

[Re-]enter Gronoas.

Gron. My lord, y'are call'd for.

Bass. Most hartily I thanke ye. Where's my wife, pray?

Gron. Retir'd amongst the ladies —

Bass. Still I thanke 'ee :
 There's an old waiter with her; saw you her too? 130

Gron. She sits i'th presence lobby fast asleepe, sir.

Bass. Asleepe? sleepe, sir!

Gron. Is your lordship troubled?
 You will not to the king?

Bass. Your humblest vassaile.

Gron. Your servant, my good lord.

Bass. I wait your footsteps.

Exeunt.

SCAENE THE THIRD. [The gardens of the palace.]

Prophilus, Penthea.

Prophilus. In this walke, lady, will your brother find you :

And, with your favour, give me leave a little
To worke a preparation. In his fashion
I have observ'd of late some kind of slacknesse
To such alacrity as nature 5
And custome tooke delight in : sadnesse growes
Upon his recreations, which he hoards
In such a willing silence, that to question
The grounds will argue [little] skill in friendship,
And lesse good manners.

Penthea. Sir, I'me not inquisitive 10
Of secrecies without an invitation.

Proph. With pardon, lady, not a sillable
Of mine implies so rude a sense ; the drift —

Enter Orgilus, [disguised as before.]

Proph. Doe thy best
To make this lady merry for an houre. Exit. 15

Orgilus. Your will shall be a law, sir.

Pen. Prethe, leave me ;
I have some private thoughts I would account with :

Use thou thine owne.

5 G-D supplies [once] after nature. 9 little. Supplied by G-D.

Org. Speake on, faire nimph, our soules
Can dance as well to musicke of the spheares
As any's who have feasted with the gods. 20

Pen. Your schoole terms are too troublesome.

Org. What heaven
Refines mortality from drosse of earth
But such as uncompounded beauty hallowes
With glorified perfection.

Pen. Set thy wits
In a lesse wild proportion.

Org. Time can never 25
On the white table of unguilty faith
Write counterfeit dishonour; turne those eyes,
The arrowes of pure love, upon that fire
Which once rose to a flame, perfum'd with
vowes
As sweetly scented as the incense smoking 30
On Vesta's altars,
. . . the holiest odours, virgin teares,
. . . sprinkled, like dewes, to feed 'em,
And to increase their fervour.

Pen. Be not franticke.

Org. All pleasures are but meere imagination, 35
Feeding the hungry appetite with steame,

31-33 On Vesta's . . . to feed 'em. So arranged by G. In Q this passage appears thus:

The holiest Artars, Virgin teares (like
On Vesta's odours) sprinkled dewes to feed 'em,

And sight of banquet, whilst the body pines,
 Not relishing the reall tast of food:
 Such is the leanness of a heart divided
 From intercourse of troth-contracted loves; 40
 No horror should deface that precious figure
 Seal'd with the lively stampe of equall soules.

Pen. Away! some fury hath bewitch'd thy tongue:

The breath of ignorance that flies from thence,
 Ripens a knowledge in me of afflictions 45
 Above all suffrance. — Thing of talke, be gone!
 Be gone, without reply!

Org. Be just, Penthea,
 In thy commands: when thou send'st forth a doome

Of banishment, know first on whom it lights.
 Thus I take off the shrowd, in which my cares 50
 Are folded up from view of common eyes.

[Throws off his scholar's dress.]

What is thy sentence next?

Pen. Rash man, thou layest
 A blemish on mine honour, with the hazard
 Of thy too desperate life: yet I professe,
 By all the lawes of ceremonious wedlocke, 55
 I have not given admittance to one thought
 Of female change since cruelty enforc'd
 Divorce betwixt my body and my heart:
 Why would you fall from goodnesse thus?

Org. O, rather
Examine me how I could live to say 60
I have bin much, much wrong'd. 'Tis for thy sake

I put on this imposture : deare Penthea,
If thy soft bosome be not turn'd to marble,
Thou't pitty our calamities ; my interest
Confirms me thou art mine still.

Pen. Lend your hand ; 65
With both of mine I claspe it thus ; thus kisse
it ;
Thus kneele before ye.

Org. You instruct my duty.

Pen. We may stand up. Have you ought else to urge
Of new demand ? As for the old, forget it ;
'Tis buried in an everlasting silence, 70
And shall be, shall be ever ; what more would ye ?

Org. I would possesse my wife ; the equity
Of very reason bids me.

Pen. Is that all ?

Org. Why 'tis the all of me my selfe.

Pen. Remove
Your steps some distance from me ; at this space 75
A few words I dare change ; but first put on
Your borrowed shape.

Org. You are obey'd ; 'tis done.

Pen. How, Orgilus, by promise I was thine
The heavens doe wisse; they can wisse too

A rape done on my truth: how I doe love thee 80
Yet, Orgilus, and yet, must best appeare
In tendering thy freedome; for I find
The constant preservation of thy merit,
By thy not daring to attempt my fame
With injury of any loose conceit, 85
Which might give deeper wounds to discontents.
Continue this faire race; then, though I cannot Adde to thy comfort, yet I shall more often
Remember from what fortune I am fallen,
And pittie mine owne ruine. — Live, live happy, 90
Happy in thy next choyce, that thou maist
people

This barren age with vertues in thy issue!
And O, when thou art married, thinke on me
With mercy, not contempt! I hope thy wife,
Hearing my story, will not scorne my fall. 95
Now let us part.

Org. Part! yet advise thee better:
Penthea is the wife to Orgilus,
And ever shall be.

Pen. Never shall nor will.

Org. How!

Pen. Heare me; in a word I'll tell thee why:
The virgin dowry which my birth bestow'd 100

Is ravish'd by another: my true love
Abhorres to thinke that Orgilus deserv'd
No better favours then a second bed.

Org. I must not take this reason.

Pen. To confirme it;
Should I outlive my bondage, let me meet 105
Another worse then this and lesse desir'd,
If of all the men alive thou shouldst but touch
My lip or hand againe!

Org. Penthea, now
I tell 'ee, you grow wanton in my sufferance:
Come, sweet, th'art mine.

Pen. Uncivill sir, forbear, 110
Or I can turne affection into vengeance;
Your reputation, if you value any,
Lyes bleeding at my feet. Unworthy man,
If ever henceforth thou appeare in language,
Message, or letter to betray my frailty, 115
I'le call thy former protestations lust,
And curse my starres for forfeit of my judgement.

Goe thou, fit onely for disguise and walkes,
To hide thy shame: this once I spare thy life.
I laugh at mine owne confidence; my sorrowes 120
By thee are made inferiour to my fortunes.
If ever thou didst harbour worthy love,
Dare not to answer. My good Genius guide me,

That I may never see thee more! — Goe from me.

Org. I' [I]e teare my vaile of politicke French off,

125

And stand up like a man resolv'd to doe :
Action, not words, shall shew me. O Penthea!

Exit Orgilus.

Pen. 'A sigh'd my name, sure, as he parted
from me :

I feare I was too rough. Alas, poore gentleman,
'A look'd not like the ruines of his youth, 130
But like the ruines of those ruines. Honour,
How much we fight with weaknesse to preserve
thee !

Enter Bassanes and Grausis.

Bassanes. Fye on thee! damb thee, rotten magat, damb thee!

Sleepe ? sleepe at court ? and now ? Aches, convulsions,

Impostumes, rhemes, gouts, palsies, clog thy bones

135

A dozen yeeres more yet !

Grausis. Now y'are in humors.

Bass. Shee's by her selfe, there's hope of that ;
shee's sad too ;

Shee's in strong contemplation ; yes, and fixt :
The signes are wholesome.

Grau. Very wholsome, truly.

Bass. Hold your chops, night mare ! — Lady, come ; your brother 140
 Is carried to his closet ; you must thither.

Pen. Not well, my lord ?

Bass. A sudden fit ; 'twill off ;
 Some surfeit or disorder. — How doest, dearest ?

Pen. Your newes is none o' th' best.

[Re-]enter Prophilus.

Proph. The chiefe of men,
 The excellentest Ithocles, desires 145
 Your presence, madam.

Bass. We are hasting to him.

Pen. In vaine we labour in this course of life
 To piece our journey out at length, or crave
 Respite of breath ; our home is in the grave.

Bass. Perfect philosophy : then let us care 150
 To live so that our reckonings may fall even
 When w'are to make account.

Proph. He cannot feare
 Who builds on noble grounds : sicknesse or paine
 Is the deservers exercise ; and such
 Your vertuous brother to the world is knowne. 155
 Speake comfort to him, lady ; be all gentle :
 Starres fall but in the grossenesse of our sight ;
 A good man dying, th' earth doth lose a light.

Exeunt omnes.

150-152 then let . . . account. G-D gives this to Penthea.

ACTUS TERTIUS: SCAENA PRIMA.

[The study of Tecnicus.]

Enter Tecnicus, and Orgilus in his owne shape.

Tecnicus. Be well advis'd; let not a resolution

Of giddy rashnesse choake the breath of reason.

Orgilus. It shall not, most sage master.

Tecn. I am jealous :

For if the borrowed shape so late put on Infer'd a consequence, we must conclude 5

Some violent designe of sudden nature
Hath shooke that shadow off, to flye upon

A new-hatch'd execution. Orgilus,
Take heed thou hast not, under our integrity, 10
Shrowded unlawfull plots : our mortall eyes

Pierce not the secrets of your hearts; the gods
Are onely privie to them.

Org. Learned Tecnicus,
Such doubts are causelesse; and to cleere the truth

From misconceit, the present state commands
me.

The Prince of Argos comes himselve in person 15
In quest of great Calantha for his bride,

11 hearts. G-D, heart.

Our kingdomes heire ; besides, mine onely sister
 Euphrania is dispos'd to Prophilus ;
 Lastly, the king is sending letters for me
 To Athens for my quicke repaire to court : 20
 Please to accept these reasons.

Tecn. Just ones, Orgilus.
 Not to be contradicted : yet beware
 Of an unsure foundation ; no faire colours
 Can fortifie a building faintly joynted.
 I have observ'd a growth in thy aspect 25
 Of dangerous extent, sudden, and, looke too't !
 I might adde certaine —

Org. My aspect ? Could art
 Runne through mine inmost thoughts, it should not sift
 An inclination there more then what suited
 With justice of mine honour.

Tecn. I beleeve it. 30
 But know then, Orgilus, what honour is :
 Honour consists not in a bare opinion
 By doing any act that feeds content ;
 Brave in appearance, 'cause we thinke it brave :
 Such honour comes by accident, not nature, 35
 Proceeding from the vices of our passion,
 Which makes our reason drunke. But reall honour
 Is the reward of vertue, and acquir'd
 By justice or by valour which for bases

Hath justice to uphold it. He then failes 40
 In honour, who for lucre [or] revenge
 Commits thefts, murders, treasons, and adulteries,

With such like, by intrenching on just lawes,
 Whose sov'raignty is best preserv'd by justice.
 Thus, as you see how honour must be grounded 45
 On knowledge, not opinion, — for opinion
 Relyes on probability and accident,
 But knowledge on necessity and truth, —
 I leave thee to the fit consideration
 Of what becomes the grace of reall honour, 50
 Wishing successe to all thy vertuous meanings.

Org. The gods increase thy wisdome, reverend oracle,
 And in thy precepts make me ever thrifty!

Exit Org.

Tecn. I thanke thy wish. — Much mystery of fate

Lyes hid in that mans fortunes; curiosity 55
 May lead his actions into rare attempts;
 But let the gods be moderators still;
 No humane power can prevent their will.

Enter Armostes.

From whence come 'ee?

Armostes. From King Amyclas, — pardon
 My interruption of your studies. — Here, 60

41 [or]. So G-D. Q, of.

In this seal'd box, he sends a treasure deare
 To him as his crowne; 'a prayes your gravity
 You would examine, ponder, sift, and bolt
 The pith and circumstance of every tittle
 The scroll within containes.

Tecn. What is't, Armostes? 65

Armo. It is the health of Sparta, the kings life,
 Sinewes and safety of the common-wealth;
 The summe of what the oracle deliver'd
 When last he visited the propheticke temple
 At Delphos: what his reasons are for which 70
 After so long a silence he requires
 You counsaile now, grave man, his majesty
 Will soone himselfe acquaint you with.

Tecn. Apollo
 Inspire my intellect! — The Prince of Argos
 Is entertain'd?

Armo. He is; and has demanded 75
 Our princessse for his wife; which I conceive
 One speciall cause the king importunes you
 For resolution of the oracle.

Tecn. My duty to the king, good peace to Sparta,
 And faire day to Armostes!

Armo. Like to Tecnicus! 80

Exeunt.

[SCENA SECUNDA. Ithocles' apartment in the palace.]

Soft musicke. A song.

*Can you paint a thought? or number
Every fancy in a slumber?*

*Can you count soft minutes roving
From a dyals point by moving?*

*Can you graspe a sigh? or, lastly,
Rob a virgins honour chastly?*

5

No, O, no! yet you may

Sooner doe both that and this,

This and that, and never misse,

Then by any praise display

10

Beauties beauty, such a glory

As beyond all fate, all story,

All armes, all arts,

All loves, all hearts,

Greater then those, or they,

15

Doe, shall, and must obey.

During which time, enters Prophilus, Bassanes, Penthea, Grausis, passing over the stage; Bassanes and Grausis enter againe softly, stealing to severall stands, and listen.

Bassanes. All silent, calme, secure. — Grausis, no creaking?

No noyse? dost heare nothing?

Grausis.

Not a mouse,

Or whisper of the winde.

Bass. The floore is matted,
The bed-posts sure are steele or marble. — Soul-diers
Should not affect, me thinkes, straines so effeminate ;
Sounds of such delicacy are but fawnings
Upon the sloth of luxury : they heighten
Cinders of covert lust up to a flame.

Grau. What doe you meane, my lord ? Speak low ; that gabling
Of yours will but undoe us.

Bass. Chamber-combats
Are felt, not hard.

Pro. [within]. 'A wakes.

Bass. What's that ?

Ithocles [within]. Who's there
Sister ? All quit the roome else.

Bass. 'Tis consented !

[Re-]enter Prophilus.

Proph. Lord Bassanes, your brother would be private,
We must forbear ; his sleepe hath newly left
him.
Please 'ee withdraw ?

Bass. By any meanes ; 'tis fit.

Proph. Pray, gentlewoman, walke too.

Grau. Yes, I will, sir.

Excunt omnes.

[The scene opens]; Ithocles discovered in a chayre, and Penthea.

Itho. Sit nearer, sister, to me; nearer yet.
 We had one father, in one wombe tooke life,
 Were brought up twins together, yet have liv'd 35
 At distance like two strangers. I could wish
 That the first pillow whereon I was cradell'd
 Had prov'd to me a grave.

Penthea. You had beene happy:
 Then had you never knowne that sinne of life
 Which blots all following glories with a vengeance, 40
 For forfeiting the last will of the dead,
 From whom you had your being.

Itho. Sad Penthea,
 Thou canst not be too cruell; my rash spleene
 Hath with a violent hand pluck'd from thy bosome
 A lover-blest heart, to grind it into dust, 45
 For which mine's now a breaking.

Pen. Not yet, heaven,
 I doe beseech thee! first let some wild fires
 Scorch, not consume it; may the heat be cherisht
 With desires infinite, but hopes impossible!

Itho. Wrong'd soule, thy prayers are heard.

Pen. Here, lo, I breathe 50
 A miserable creature, led to ruine
 By an unnaturall brother.

Itho.

I consume

In languishing affections for that trespasse,
Yet cannot dye.

Pen.

The handmaid to the wages
Of country toyle drinkes the untroubled streames 55
With leaping kids and with the bleating lambes,
And so allayes her thirst secure, whiles I Quench my hot sighes with fleetings of my teares.

Itho. The labourer doth eat his coursest bread, Earn'd with his sweat, and lyes him downe to
sleepe; 60

Which every bit I touch turnes in digestion
To gall as bitter as Penthea's curse.
Put me to any pennance for my tyranny,
And I will call thee mercifull.

Pen.

Pray kill me,
Rid me from living with a jealous husband; 65
Then we will joyne in friendship, be againe
Brother and sister. — Kill me, pray; nay, will'ee?

Itho. How does thy lord esteeme thee?Pen.

Such an one
As onely you have made me; a faith-breaker,
A spotted whore: forgive me, I am one 70
In act, not in desires, the gods must witnesse.

55 Of . . . streames. So arranged by G. Q, the untroubled of country toyle, drinkes streames.

61 Which. G-D While. digestion. Q, digestion.

71 act. Q, art.

Itho. Thou dost be lye thy friend.

Pen. I doe not, Ithocles ;
 For she that's wife to Orgilus, and lives
 In knowne adultery with Bassanes,
 Is at the best a whore. Wilt kill me now ? 75
 The ashes of our parents will assume
 Some dreadfull figure, and appeare to charge
 Thy bloody gilt, that hast betray'd their name
 To infamy in this reproachfull match.

Itho. After my victories abroad, at home 80
 I meet despaire ; ingratitude of nature
 Hath made my actions monstrous : thou shalt stand

A deity, my sister, and be worship'd
 For thy resolved martyrdome ; wrong'd maids
 And married wives shall to thy hallowed shrine 85
 Offer their orisons, and sacrifice
 Pure turtles crown'd with mirtle, if thy pittie
 Unto a yeelding brothers pressure lend
 One finger but to ease it.

Pen. O, no more !

Itho. Death waits to waft me to the Stygian bankes, 90
 And free me from this chaos of my bondage ;
 And till thou wilt forgive, I must indure.

Pen. Who is the saint you serve ?

Itho. Friendship, or [nearness]

Of birth to any but my sister, durst not
 Have mov'd that question as a secret, sister : 95
 I dare not murmur to my selfe.

Pen. Let me,
 By your new protestations I conjure 'ee,
 Partake her name.

Itho. Her name, — 'tis, — 'tis, I dare not.

Pen. All your respects are forg'd.

Itho. They are not. — Peace!
 Calantha is the princesse, the kings daughter, 100
 Sole heire of Sparta. — Me most miserable!
 Doe I now love thee? for my injuries
 Revenge thy selfe with bravery, and gossip
 My treasons to the kings cares. Doe; Calantha
 Knowes it not yet, nor Prophilus, my nearest. 105

Pen. Suppose you were contracted to her, would it not
 Split even your very soule to see her father
 Snatch her out of your armes against her will,
 And force her on the Prince of Argos?

Itho. Trouble not
 The fountaines of mine eyes with thine owne story; 110
 I sweat in blood for't.

Pen. We are reconcil'd:
 Alas, sir, being children, but two branches

95 question . . . sister. G-D puts a semicolon after question, changes as to 'tis, and puts a comma after sister.

Of one stocke, 'tis not fit we should divide :
Have comfort, you may find it.

Itbo. Yes, in thee :
Onely in thee, Penthea mine.

Pen. If sorrowes 115
Have not too much dull'd my infected braine,
I'le cheere invention for an active straine.

Itbo. Mad man ! why have I wrong'd a maid so excellent !

Enter Bassanes with a ponyard, Prophilus, Groneas, Hemophill, and Grausis.

Bass. I can forbear no longer ; more, I will not :

Keepe off your hands, or fall upon my point. 120
Patience is tye'd, for like a slow-pac'd asse
Ye ride my easie nature, and proclaime
My sloth to vengeance a reproach and property.

Itbo. The meaning of this rudenesse ?

Proph. Hee's distracted.

Pen. O my griev'd lord !

Grau. Sweet lady, come not neere him ; 125
He holds his perilous weapon in his hand
To pricke 'a cares not whom, nor where,—see, see, see !

Bass. My birth is noble : though the popular blast

Of vanity, as giddy as thy youth,
Hath rear'd thy name up to bestride a cloud, 130

Or progresse in the chariot of the sunne,
 I am no clod of trade, to lackey pride,
 Nor, like your slave of expectation, wait
 The baudy hinges of your dores, or whistle
 For mysticall conveyance to your bed-sports. 135

Groncas. Fine humors! They become him.

Hemophil. How 'a stares,
 Struts, puffes, and sweats: most admirable lunacy!

Itbo. But that I may conceive the spirit of wine

Has tooke possession of your soberer custome,
 I'de say you were unmannerly.

Pen. Deare brother! 140

Bass. Unmannerly!—Mew, kitling!—Smooth formality

Is usher to the ranknesse of the blood,
 But impudence beares up the traine. Indeed,
 sir,

Your fiery mettall or your springall blaze
 Of huge renowne is no sufficient royalty 145
 To print upon my forehead the scorne, “cuck-old.”

Itbo. His jealousie has rob'd him of his wits;
 'A talkes 'a knowes not what.

Bass. Yes, and 'a knowes
 To whom 'a talkes; to one that franks his lust
 In swine-security of bestiall incest. 150

Itbo. Hah, devill!

Bass. I will hallo't, though I blush more
To name the filthinesse than thou to act it.

Itbo. Monster! [Draws his sword.]

Propb. Sir, by our friendship —

Pen. By our bloods,
Will you quite both undoe us, brother?

Grau. Out on him,
These are his megrims, firks, and melancholies. 155

Hem. Well said, old touch-hole.

Gron. Kick him out at dores.

Pen. With favour, let me speake. — My lord, what slacknesse
In my obedience hath deserv'd this rage?
Except humility and silent duty
Have drawne on your unquiet, my simplicity 160
Ne're studied your vexation.

Bass. Light of beauty,
Deale not ungently with a desperate wound!
No breach of reason dares make warre with her Whose lookes are soveraignty, whose breath is balme:

O that I could preserve thee in fruition 165
As in devotion!

Pen. Sir, may every evill
Lock'd in Pandora's box, showre, in your presence,

On my unhappy head, if since you made me

A partner in your bed, I have beene faulty
In one unseemely thought against your honour. 170

Itbo. Purge not his griefes, Penthea.

Bass. Yes, say on,
Excellent creature! — Good, be not a hinderance
To peace and praise of vertue. — O my senses Are charm'd with sounds caelestiall! — On, deare, on;

I never gave you one ill word; say, did I? 175
Indeed I did not.

Pen. Nor, by Juno's forehead,
Was I e're guilty of a wanton error.

Bass. O goddesse! let me kneele.

Grau. Alas, kind animall.

Itbo. No, but for pennance.

Bass. Noble sir, what is it?
With gladnesse I embrace it; yet, pray let not 180
My rashnesse teach you to be too unmercifull.

Itbo. When you shall shew good prooffe that manly wisdom, 185
Not over-sway'd by passion or opinion,
Knowes how to lead [your] judgement, then
this lady,
Your wife, my sister, shall returne in safety
Home to be guided by you; but, till first
I can out of cleare evidence approve it,
Shee shall be my care.

Bass. Rip my bosome up,
I'le stand the execution with a constancy :
This torture is unsufferable.

Itho. Well, sir, 190
I dare not trust her to your fury.

Bass. But
Penthea sayes not so.

Pen. She needs no tongue
To plead excuse who never purpos'd wrong.

Hem. Virgin of reverence and antiquity,
Stay you behind. 195

Gron. The court wants not your diligence.

Exeunt omnes, sed Bass. & Graus.

Grau. What will you doe, my lord? my lady's gone ;
I am deny'd to follow.

Bass. I may see her,
Or speake to her once more.

Grau. And feele her too, man ;
Be of good cheare, she's your owne flesh and bone. 200

Bass. Diseases desperate must find cures alike :
She swore she has beene true.

Grau. True, on my modesty.

Bass. Let him want truth who credits not her
vowes!

Much wrong I did her, but her brother infinite ;
Rumor will voyce me the contempt of manhood, 205

My cozens thraldome, but to free mine owne : 15
 Report of great Calantha's beauty, vertue,
 Sweetnesse, and singular perfections, courted
 All eares to credit what I finde was publish'd
 By constant truth: from which, if any service
 Of my desert can purchase faire construction, 20
 This lady must command it.

Calantha. Princely sir,
 So well you know how to professe observance
 That you instruct your hearers to become Practitioners in duty; of which number
 I'le study to be chiefe.

Near. Chiefe, glorious virgine, 25
 In my devotions, as in all mens wonder.

Amy. Excellent cozen, we deny no libertie;
 Use thine owne opportunities. — Armostes,
 We must consult with the philosophers;
 The businesse is of weight.

Armostes. Sir, at your pleasure. 30

Amy. You told me, Crotolon, your sonne's return'd
 From Athens: wherefore comes 'a not to court
 As we commanded?

Crotolon. He shall soone attend
 Your royall will, great sir.

Amy. The marriage
 Betweene young Prophilus and Euphranea, 35
 Tasts of too much delay.

Crot. My lord—

Amy. Some pleasures
At celebration of it would give life
To th' entertainment of the prince our kinsman ;
Our court weares gravity more then we rellish.

Arm. Yet the heavens smile on all your high attempts, 40
Without a cloud.

Crot. So may the gods protect us!

Cal. A prince, a subject ?

Near. Yes, to beauties sceptor ;
As all hearts kneele, so mine.

Cal. You are too courtly.

[Enter] to them, Ithocles, Orgilus, Prophilus.

Ithocles. Your safe returne to Sparta is most welcome ;

I joy to meet you here, and as occasion 45
Shall grant us privacy, will yeeld you reasons
Why I should covet to deserve the title
Of your respected friend ; for without complement

Beleeve it, Orgilus, 'tis my ambition.

Orgilus. Your lordship may command me, your poore servant. 50

Itho. [aside]. So amorously close ? — So soone ? — my heart !

Prophilus. What sudden change is next ?

51 close. Q, close close.

Itho. Life to the king,
To whom I here present this noble gentleman,
New come from Athens; royall sir, vouchsafe
Your gracious hand in favour of his merit. 55

Crot. [aside]. My sonne preferr'd by Ithocles!

Amy. Our bounties
Shall open to thee, Orgilus; for instance, —
Harke in thine eare, — if out of those inventions
Which flow in Athens, thou hast there ingrost
Some rarity of wit to grace the nuptials 60
Of thy faire sister, and renoune our court
In th' eyes of this young prince, we shall be debtor

To thy conceit; thinke on't.

Org. Your highnesse honors me.

Near. My tongue and heart are twins.

Cal. A noble birth,
Becomming such a father. — Worthy Orgilus, 65
You are a guest most wish'd for.

Org. May my duty
Still rise in your opinion, sacred princesse!

Itho. Euphranea's brother, sir, a gentleman
Well worthy of your knowledge.

Near. We embrace him,
Proud of so deare acquaintance.

Amy. All prepare 70
For revells and disport; the joyes of Hymen,
Like Phoebus in his lustre, puts to flight

All mists of dulnesse ; crowne the houres with gladnesse ;

No sounds but musicke, no discourse but mirth.

Cal. Thine arme, I prethe, Ithocles. —

Nay, good

75

My lord, keepe on your way ; I am provided.

Near. I dare not disobey.

Itho. Most heavenly lady ! Exeunt.

[SCENA QUARTA. A room in the house of Crotolon.]

Enter Crotolon, Orgilus.

Crotolon. The king hath spoke his mind.

Orgilus. His will he hath ;

But were it lawfull to hold plea against

The power of greatnesse, not the reason, haply

Such under-shrubs as subjects sometimes might

Borrow of nature justice, to informe

5

That licence soveraignty holds without checke

Over a meeke obedience.

Crot.

How resolve you

Touching your sisters marriage ? Prophilus

Is a deserving and a hopefull youth.

Org. I envy not his merit, but applaud it ;

10

Could [wish] him thrift in all his best desires,

And with a willingnesse inleague our blood

11 [wish]. So G-D. Q, with.

With his, for purchase of full growth in friendship.

He never touch'd on any wrong that malic'd
The honour of our house, nor stirr'd our peace; 15
Yet, with your favour, let me not forget
Under whose wing he gathers warmth and comfort,

Whose creature he is bound, made, and must live so.

Crot. Sonne, sonne, I find in thee a harsh condition;

No curtesie can winne it; 'tis too ranckorous. 20

Org. Good sir, be not severe in your construction;

I am no stranger to such easie calmes
As sit in tender bosomes: lordly Ithocles
Hath grac'd my entertainment in abundance;
Too humbly hath descended from that height 25
Of arrogance and spleene which wrought the rape

On griev'd Penthea's purity: his scorne
Of my untoward fortunes is reclaim'd
Unto a courtship, almost to a fawning:
I'le kisse his foot, since you will have it so. 30

Crot. Since I will have it so? Friend, I will have it so

Without our ruine by your politike plots,

Or wolfe of hatred snarling in your breast.
 You have a spirit, sir, have ye? a familiar
 That poasts i'th' ayre for your intelligence? 35
 Some such hobgoblin hurried you from Athens,
 For yet you come unsent for.

Org. If unwelcome,
 I might have found a grave there.

Crot. Sure, your businesse
 Was soone dispatch'd, or your mind alter'd quickly.

Org. 'Twas care, sir, of my health cut short my journey; 40
 For there a generall infection
 Threatens a desolation.

Crot. And I feare
 Thou hast brought backe a worse infection with
 thee,
 Infection of thy mind; which, as thou sayst,
 Threatens the desolation of our family. 45

Org. Forbid it, our deare Genius! I will rather
 Be made a sacrifice on Thrasus monument,
 Or kneele to Ithocles his sonne in dust,
 Then woe a fathers curse. My sisters marriage
 With Prophilus is from my heart confirm'd: 50
 May I live hated, may I dye despis'd,
 If I omit to further it in all
 That can concerne me!

Crot. I have beene too rough.
My duty to my king made me so earnest ;
Excuse it Orgilus.

Org. Deare sir, —
Enter to them, Prophilus, Euphranea, Ithocles, Gro-neas, Hemophil.

Crot. Here comes 55
Euphranea, with Prophilus and Ithocles.

Org. Most honored ! — ever famous !

Ithocles. Your true friend ;
On earth not any truer. — With smooth eyes
Looke on this worthy couple ; your consent
Can onely make them one.

Org. They have it. — Sister, 60
Thou pawn'dst to me an oath, of which ingage-
ment

I never will release thee, if thou aym'st
At any other choyce then this.

Euphranea. Deare brother,
At him or none.

Crot. To which my blessing's added.

Org. Which, till a greater ceremony perfect, 65
Euphranea, lend thy hand ; here, take her, Pro-
philus :

Live long a happy man and wife ; and further,
That these in presence may conclude an omen,
Thus for a bridall song I close my wishes :

Comforts lasting, loves increasing, 70
Like soft houres never ceasing ;
Plenties pleasure, peace complying
Without jarres, or tongues envying ;
Hearts by holy union wedded
More then theirs by custome bedded ; 75
Fruitfull issues ; life so graced,
Not by age to be defaced,
Budding, as the yeare ensu' th,
Every spring another youth :
All what thought can adde beside 80
Crowne this bridegroom and this bride!

Prophilus. You have seal'd joy close to my soule : Euphranea,
 Now I may call thee mine.

Itho. I but exchange
 One good friend for another.

Org. If these gallants
 Will please to grace a poore invention 85
 By joyning with me in some slight devise,
 I'le venture on a straine my younger dayes
 Have studied for delight.

Hemophil. With thankfull willingnesse
 I offer my attendance ;

Groneas. No endeavour
 Of mine shall faile to shew itselfe.

Itho. We will 90
 All joyne to wait on thy directions, Orgilus.

Org. O, my good lord, your favours flow towards

A too unworthy worme; but as you please;
I am what you will shape me.

Itho. A fast friend.

Crot. I thanke thee, sonne, for this acknowledgement;

95

It is a sight of gladnesse.

Org. But my duty. Exeunt omnes.

[SCENA QUINTA Calantha's apartment in the palace.]

Enter Calantha, Penthea, Christalla, Philema.

Calantha. Who e're would speake with us, deny his entrance;

Be carefull of our charge.

Christalla. We shall, madam.

Cal. Except the king himselfe, give none admittance;

Not any.

Philema. Madam, it shall be our care.

Exeunt [Christalla and Philema.]

Calantha, Penthea.

Cal. Being alone, Penthea, you have granted 5
The oportunity you sought, and might
At all times have commanded.

Penthea. 'Tis a benefit

Which I shall owe your goodnesse even in death for :

My glasse of life, sweet princesse, hath few minutes

Remaining to runne downe ; the sands are spent ; 10

For by an inward messenger I feele

The summons of departure short and certaine.

Cal. You feed too much your melancholly.

Pen. Glories

Of humane greatnesse are but pleasing dreames

And shadowes soone decaying : on the stage 15

Of my mortality my youth hath acted

Some scenes of vanity, drawne out at length

By varied pleasures, sweetned in the mixture,

But tragicall in issue : beauty, pompe,

With every sensuality our giddinesse 20

Doth frame an idoll, are unconstant friends

When any troubled passion makes assault

On the unguarded castle of the mind.

Cal. Contemne not your condition for the prooffe

Of bare opinion onely : to what end 25

Reach all these morall texts ?

Pen. To place before 'ee

A perfect mirror, wherein you may see

How weary I am of a lingring life,

Who count the best a misery.

Cal. Indeed

You have no little cause: yet none so great 30
As to distrust a remedy.

Pen. That remedy
Must be a winding sheet, a fold of lead,
And some untrod-on corner in the earth.
Not to detaine your expectation, princesse,
I have an humble suit.

Cal. Speake; I enjoy it. 35

Pen. Vouchsafe, then, to be my executrix,
And take that trouble on 'ee to dispose
Such legacies as I bequeath impartially:
I have not much to give, the paines are easie;
Heaven will reward your piety, and thanke it 40
When I am dead; for sure I must not live;
I hope I cannot.

Cal. Now, beshrew thy sadnesse;
Thou turn'st me too much woman.

Pen. [aside]. Her faire eyes
Melt into passion. — Then I have assurance Encouraging my boldnesse. — In this paper 45
My will was character'd; which you, with pardon,
Shall now know from mine owne mouth.

Cal. Talke on, prethe;
It is a pretty earnest.

Pen. I have left me

35 enjoy. So Q and G-D. D suggests "enjoin." W. substitutes and for I.

But three poore jewels to bequeath. The first is

My youth ; for though I am much old in griefes, 50
In yeares I am a child.

Cal. To whom that ?

Pen. To virgin-wives, such as abuse not wed-locke

By freedome of desires, but covet chiefly
The pledges of chast beds for tyes of love,
Rather than ranging of their blood ; and next 55
To married maids, such as preferre the number
Of honorable issue in their vertues
Before the flattery of delights by marriage :
May those be ever young !

Cal. A second jewell

You meane to part with.

Pen. 'Tis my fame, I trust 60

By scandall yet untouch'd ; this I bequeath
To Memory, and Times old daughter, Truth.
If ever my unhappy name find mention
When I am false to dust, may it deserve
Beseeming charity without dishonour. 65

Cal. How handsomely thou playst with harm-lesse sport

Of meere imagination ; speake the last,
I strangely like thy will.

Pen. This jewell, madam,

51 To whom that ? G-D, To whom that [jewel] ?

Is dearely precious to me ; you must use
The best of your discretion to imploy
This gift as I entend it.

Cal. Doe not doubt me.

Pen. 'Tis long agone since first I lost my
heart :

Long I have liv'd without it, else for certaine
I should have given that too ; but in stead
Of it, to great Calantha, Sparta's heire, 175
By service bound and by affection vow'd,
I doe bequeath in holiest rites of love
Mine onely brother, Ithocles.

Cal. What saydst thou?

Pen. Impute not, heaven-blest lady, to ambition

A faith as humbly perfect as the prayers 80
Of a devoted suppliant can indow it :
Looke on him, princesse, with an eye of pittie ;
How like the ghost of what he late appear'd
A' moves before you.

Cal. Shall I answer here,
Or lend my eare too grossely ?

Pen. First, his heart 85
Shall fall in cynders, scorch'd by your disdaine,
E're he will dare, poore man, to ope an eye
On these divine lookes, but with low-bent
thoughts

Accusing such presumption ; as for words,
 A' dares not utter any but of service : 90
 Yet this lost creature loves 'ee. — Be a princess
 In sweetnesse as in blood ; give him his doome,
 Or raise him up to comfort.

Cal. What new change
 Appeares in my behaviour, that thou dar'st
 Tempt my displeasure ?

Pen. I must leave the world 95
 To revell [in] Elizium, and 'tis just
 To wish my brother some advantage here ;
 Yet, by my best hopes, Ithocles is ignorant
 Of this pursuit. But if you please to kill him,
 Lend him one angry looke or one harsh word, 100
 And you shall soone conclude how strong a power
 Your absolute authority holds over
 His life and end.

Cal. You have forgot, Penthea,
 How still I have a father.

Pen. But remember
 I am a sister, though to me this brother 105
 Hath beene, you know, unkinde, O, most unkinde !

Cal. Christalla, Philema, where are 'ee? —
 Lady,
 Your checke lyes in my silence.

[Re-]enter Christalla and Philema.

Both. Madam, here.

Cal. I thinke 'ee sleepe, 'ee drones ; wait on Penthea

Unto her lodging. — [Aside.] Ithocles? wrong'd
lady! 110

Pen. My reckonings are made even ; death or fate

Can now nor strike too soone nor force too late.

Exeunt.

ACTUS QUARTUS, SCAENA
PRIMA

Ithocles apartment in the palace.

Enter Ithocles and Armostes.

Ithocles. Forbear your inquisition : curiosity
Is of too subtill and too searching nature,
In feares of love too quicke, too slow of credit :
I am not what you doubt me.

Armostes. Nephew, be, then,
As I would wish ; — all is not right, — good heaven

5
Confirme your resolutions for dependance
On worthy ends which may advance your quiet !

Itho. I did the noble Orgilus much injury,
But griev'd Penthea more : I now repent it ;
Now, uncle, now ; this “ now ” is now too late : 10
So provident is folly in sad issue,
That after-wit, like bankrupts debts, stand tallyed
Without all possibilities of payment.
Sure he's an honest, very honest gentleman ;
A man of single meaning.

Arm. I beleeve it : 15
Yet, nephew, 'tis the tongue informes our cares ;
Our eyes can never pierce into the thoughts,

For they are lodg'd too inward : — but I question
No truth in Orgilus. — The princesse, sir !

Itbo. The Princesses ? ha !

Arm. With her, the Prince of Argos. 20

Enter Nearchus leading Calantha, Amelus, Christalla, Philema.

Nearchus. Great faire one, grace my hopes with any instance

Of livery, from the allowance of your favour ;
This little sparke. —

[Attempts to take a ring from her finger.]

Calantha. A toy !

Near. Love feasts on toys,
For Cupid is a child — vouchsafe this bounty :
It cannot [be deny'd].

Cal. You shall not value, 25
Sweet cozen, at a price what I count cheape ;
So cheape, that let him take it who dares stoope
for't,

And give it at next meeting to a mistresse :
Shee'le thanke him for't, perhaps.

Casts it to Itboles.

Amelus. The ring, sir, is
The princesses ; I could have tooke it up. 30

Itbo. Learne manners, prethe. — To the blessed owner,
Upon my knees —

25 [be deny'd] Q, beny'd.

Near. Y'are sawcy.

Cal. This is pretty !

I am, belike, a mistresse, — wondrous pretty ! —
Let the man keepe his fortune, since he found
it ;

He's worthy on't. — On, cozen !

Itho. Follow, spaniell ; 35

I'le force 'ee to a fawning else.

Amel. You dare not.

Exeunt. Manent Itho. & Armost.

Arm. My lord, you were too forward.

Itho. Looke 'ee, uncle :

Some such there are whose liberall contents
Swarme without care in every sort of plenty ;
Who, after full repasts, can lay them downe 40
To sleepe ; and they sleepe, uncle : in which silence

Their very dreames present 'em choyce of pleasures,

Pleasures — observe me, uncle — of rare object :
Here heaps of gold, there increments of honors ;
Now change of garments, then the votes of
people ; 45

Anon varieties of beauties, courting,
In flatteries of the night, exchange of dalliance.
Yet these are still but dreames : give me felicity
Of which my senses waking are partakers,
A reall, visible, materiall happinesse ; 50

And then, too, when I stagger in expectance
Of the least comfort that can cherish life :—
I saw it, sir, I saw it ; for it came
From her owne hand.

Arm. The princesse threw it t'ee.

Itho. True, and she said — well I remember what.

55

Her cozen prince would beg it.

Arm. Yes, and parted

In anger at your taking on't.

Itho. Penthea !

Oh, thou hast pleaded with a powerfull language !

I want a fee to gratifie thy myrit,

But I will doe —

Arm. What is't you say ?

Itho. In anger, 60

In anger let him part ; for could his breath,
Like whirlewinds, tosse such servile slaves as licke

The dust his footsteps print into a vapour,
It durst not stirre a haire of mine, it should not ;
I'de rend it up by th' roots first. To be any thing

65

Calantha smiles on, is to be a blessing
More sacred than a petty — Prince of Argos
Can wish to equall or in worth or title.

Arm. Containe your selfe, my lord : Ixion, ayming

To embrace Juno, bosom'd but a cloud, 70
 And begat Centaures : 'tis an useful morall :
 Ambition hatch'd in clouds of meere opinion
 Proves but in birth a prodigie.

Itho. I thanke 'ee ;
 Yet, with your licence, I should seeme uncharitable

To gentler fate, if rellishing the dainties 75
 Of a soules setled peace, I were so feeble
 Not to digest it.

Arm. He deserves small trust
 Who is not privy counsellor to himselfe.

[Re-]enter Nearchus, Orgilus, and Amelus.

Near. Brave me ?

Org. Your excellence mistakes his temper ;
 For Ithocles in fashion of his mind 80
 Is beautifull, soft, gentle, the cleare mirror
 Of absolute perfection.

Amel. Was't your modesty
 Term'd any of the prince his servants "spaniell" ?
 Your nurse sure taught you other language.

Itho. Language !

Near. A gallant man at armes is here, a doctor 85
 In feats of chivalry, blunt and rough spoken,
 Vouchsafing not the fustian of civility,
 Which [less] rash spirits stile good manners.

Itho. Manners!

Org. No more, illustrious sir; 'tis matchlesse
Ithocles.

Near. You might have understood who I am.

Itho. Yes, 90

I did; else — but the presence calm'd th' affront;

Y'are cozen to the princesse.

Near. To the king too;

A certaine instrument that lent supportance
To your collossicke greatnesse — to that king too,
You might have added.

Itho. There is more divinity 95

In beauty then in majesty.

Arm. O fie, fie!

Near. This odde youths pride turnes hereticke in loyalty.

Sirrah! low mushrooms never rivall cedars.

Exeunt Nearchus & Amelus.

Itho. Come backe! What pittifull dull thing am I

So to be tamely scoulded at? Come backe! 100

Let him come backe, and eccho once againe
That scornefull sound of mushrome! Painted colts,

Like heralds coats, guilt o're with crownes and scepters,

May bait a muzled lion.

Arm. Cozen, cozen,
Thy tongue is not thy friend.

Org. In point of honour 105
Discretion knowes no bounds. Amelus told me

'Twas all about a little ring.

Itho. A ring
The princessse threw away, and I tooke up:
Admit she threw't to me, what arme of brasse Can snatch it hence? No; could a' grind the hoope 110

To powder, a' might sooner reach my heart
Then steale and weare one dust on't. — Orgilus,
I am extremely wrong'd.

Org. A ladies favour
Is not to be so slighted.

Itho. Slighted!

Arm. Quiet
These vaine unruly passions, which will render ye 115
Into a madnesse.

Org. Griefes will have their vent.

Enter Technician.

Arm. Welcome; thou com'st in season, reverend man,
To powre the balsome of a supplying patience
Into the festering wound of ill-spent fury.

Org. [aside]. What makes he here?

Tecnicus. The hurts are yet but mortall,¹²⁰
Which shortly will prove deadly. To the king,
Armostes, see in safety thou deliver
This seal'd up counsaile; bid him with a constancy

Peruse the secrets of the gods. — O Sparta,
O Lacedemon! double nam'd, but one ¹²⁵
In fate: when kingdomes reele,—marke well my saw,—

Their heads must needs be giddy. Tell the king
That henceforth he no more must enquire after My aged head; Apollo wils it so;
I am for Delphos.

Arm. Not without some conference¹³⁰
With our great master.

Tecn. Never more to see him;
A greater prince commands me. — Ithocles,

*When youth is ripe, and age from time doth part,
The livelesse trunk shall wed the broken heart.*

Itho. What's this, if understood?

Tecn. List, Orgilus;¹³⁵
Remember what I told thee long before,
These teares shall be my witnesse.

Arm. 'Las, good man!

¹²⁰ but. G-D preserves, but suggests that "not" may be the right word.

Tecn. Let craft with curtesie a while conferre,
Revenge proves its owne executioner.

Org. Darke sentences are for Apollo's priests; 140
I am not Oedipus.

Tecn. My howre is come;
Cheare up the king; farewell to all. — O Sparta,
O Lacedemon! Exit Tecn.

Arm. If propheticke fire
Have warm'd this old mans bosome, we might construe
His words to fatall sense.

Itho. Leave to the powers 145
Above us the effects of their decrees;
My burthen lyes within me. Servile feares
Prevent no great effects. — Divine Calantha!

Arm. The gods be still propitious! —
Exeunt; manet Org.

Org. Something oddly
The booke-man prated; yet 'a talk'd it weeping: 150

*Let craft with curtesie a while conferre,
Revenge proves its owne executioner.*

Conne it again; for what? It shall not puzzle me;
'Tis dotage of a withered braine. — Penthea
Forbad me not her presence; I may see her, 155
And gaze my fill: why see her then I may;
When, if I faint to speake, I must be silent.

Exit Org.

[SCENA SECUNDA. A room in Bassanes' house.]

Enter Bassanes, Grausis, and Phulas.

Bassanes. Pray, use your recreations; all the service

I will expect is quietnesse amongst 'ee;
Take liberty at home, abroad, at all times,
And in your charities appease the gods
Whom I with my distractions have offended. 5

Grausis. Faire blessings on thy heart!

Phulas [aside]. Here's a rare change;
My lord, to cure the itch, is surely gelded;
The cuckold in conceit hath cast his hornes.

Bass. Betake 'ee to your severall occasions,
And wherein I have heretofore beene faulty, 10
Let your constructions mildly passe it over;
Henceforth I'le study reformation, — more
I have not for employment.

Grau. O, sweet man!
Thou art the very hony-combe of honesty.

Phul. The garland of good-will. — Old lady, hold up 15
Thy reverend snout, and trot behind me softly,
As it becomes a moile of ancient carriage.

Exeunt; manet Bass.

Bass. Beasts, onely capable of sense, enjoy

The benefit of food and ease with thankfulnesse ;
Such silly creatures, with a grudging, kicke not

20

Against the portion nature hath bestow'd ;
But men endow'd with reason and the use
Of reason, to distinguish from the chaffe
Of abject scarcicity the quintessence,
Soule, and elixar of the earths abundance,
The treasures of the sea, the ayre, nay, heaven,
Repining at these glories of creation,
Are verier beasts than beasts ; and of those beasts
The worst am I ; I, who was made a monarch
Of what a heart could wish for, a chast wife,
Endevour'd what in me lay to pull downe
That temple built for adoration onely,
And level't in the dust of causelesse scandall.
But, to redeeme a sacrilege so impious,
Humility shall powre before the deities
I have incenst, a largesse of more patience
Then their displeas'd altars can require :
No tempests of commotion shall disquiet
The calmes of my composure.

25

30

35

Enter Orgilus.

Orgilus. I have found thee,
Thou patron of more horrors then the bulke
Of manhood, hoop'd about with ribs of iron,
Can cramb within thy brest : Penthea, Bassanes,

40

36 largesse. Q, largenesse.

Curst by thy jealousies, — more, by thy dotage, —
Is left a prey to words.

Bass.

Exercise

Your trials for addition to my pennance; 45
I am resolv'd.

Org.

Play not with misery

Past cure : some angry minister of fate hath Depos'd the empresse of her soule, her reason,
From its most proper throne ; but, what's the miracle

More new, I, I have seene it, and yet live ! 50

Bass. You may delude my senses, not my judgement ;

'Tis anchor'd into a firme resolution ;
Dalliance of mirth or wit can ne're unfixe it.
Practise yet further.

Org.

May thy death of love to her

Damne all thy comforts to a lasting fast 55
From every joy of life ! Thou barren rocke,
By thee we have bee[n] split in ken of harbour.

Enter Ithocles, Penthea her haire about her eares, Philema, Christalla.

Ithocles. Sister, looke up ; your Ithocles, your brother,

Speakes t'ee ; why doe you weepe ? Deere, turne not from me :

Here is a killing sight ; lo, Bassanes, 60
A lamentable object.

Org. Man, dost see't?
Sports are more gamesome; am I yet in merri-
ment?

Why dost not laugh?

Bass. Divine and best of ladies,
Please to forget my out-rage; mercy ever
Cannot but lodge under a root so excellent: 65
I have cast off that cruelty of frenzy
Which once appear'd [imposture], and then jugled
To cheat my sleeps of rest.

Org. Was I in earnest?

Pen. Sure, if we were all sirens, we should sing pittifully,
And 'twere a comely musicke, when in parts 70
One sung anothers knell: the turtle sighes
When he hath lost his mate; and yet some say
A' must be dead first: 'tis a fine deceit
To passe away in a dreame! indeed, I've slept
With mine eyes open a great while. No fals-hood 75

Equals a broken faith; there's not a haire
Sticks on my head but like a leaden plummet
It sinkes me to the grave: I must creepe thither.
The journey is not long.

Itho. But thou, Penthea,

65 root. G-D, roof.

67 [imposture]. So G-D. Q, Impostors.

Hast many yeeres, I hope, to number yet, 80
E're thou canst travell that way.

Bass. Let the [sun] first
Be wrap'd up in an everlasting darknesse,
Before the light of nature, chiefly form'd
For the whole worlds delight, feele an ecclipse
So universall.

Org. Wisdome, looke 'ee, begins 85
To rave! — art thou mad too, antiquity?

Pen. Since I was first a wife, I might have beene
Mother to many pretty pratling babes;
They would have smil'd when I smil'd, and, for
certaine,
I should have cry'd when they cry'd: — truly,
brother, 90

My father would have pick'd me out a husband,
And then my little ones had beene no bastards;
But 'tis too late for me to marry now,
I am past child-bearing; 'tis not my fault.

Bass. Fall on me, if there be a burning Etna, 95
And bury me in flames! sweats hot as sulphure
Boyle through my pores: affliction hath in store
No torture like to this.

Org. Behold a patience!
Lay by thy whyning gray dissimulation,
Doe something worth a chronicle; shew justice 100
Upon the author of this mischiefe; dig out

The jealousies that hatch'd this thraldome first
 With thine owne ponyard : every anticke rapture
 Can roare as thine does.

Itho. Orgilus, forbear.

Bass. Disturbe him not ; it is a talking motion 100
 Provided for my torment. What a foole am I
 To bawdy passion ! E're I'le speake a word,
 I will looke on and burst.

Pen. I lov'd you once.

Org. Thou didst, wrong'd creature, in despite of malice ;
 For it I love thee ever.

Pen. Spare your hand ; 110
 Beleeve me, I'le not hurt it.

Org. Paine my heart to . . .

[Pen.] Complaine not though I wring it hard : I'le kisse it ;

O 'tis a fine soft palme : harke in thine eare ;
 Like whom doe I looke, prethe ? nay, no whispering.

Goodnesse ! we had beene happy : too much happinesse 115
 Will make folke proud, they say — but that is he ; Points at Ithocles.

107 bawdy. So Q and G. Changed by D in G-D to bandy.

111 Paine my heart to. Q is corrupt here. G-D omits paine and reads My heart too. W, Pain my heart too.

112-122 Complaine . . . still 'tis he. Q gives this speech to Orgilus.

And yet he paid for't home ; alas, his heart
 Is crept into the cabinet of the princesse ;
 We shall have points and bridelaces. Remember
 When we last gather'd roses in the garden 120
 I found my wits ; but truly you lost yours :
 That's he, and still 'tis he.

Itho. Poore soule, how idely
 Her fancies guide her tongue.

Bass. [aside]. Keepe in, vexation,
 And breake not into clamour.

Org. [aside]. She has tutor'd me ;
 Some powerfull inspiration checks my laziness. — 125

Now let me kisse your hand, griev'd beauty.

Pen. Kisse it.
 Alacke, alacke, his lips be wondrous cold ;
 Deare soule, h'as lost his colour ; have 'ee
 seene

A straying heart ? all crannies, every drop
 Of blood is turn'd to an amethist, 130
 Which married bachelours hang in their eares.

Org. Peace usher her into Elizium ! —
 If this be madnesse, madnesse is an oracle.

Exit Org.

Itho. Christalla, Philema, when slept my sister,
 Her ravings are so wild ?

Christalla. Sir, not these ten dayes. 135

Philema. We watch by her continually ; besides,

We cannot any way pray her to eat.

Bass. Oh — misery of miseries !

Pen. Take comfort ;
You may live well, and dye a good old man.
By yea and nay, an oath not to be broken, 140
If you had joyn'd our hands once in the temple, —

'T was since my father dy'd, for had he liv'd
He would have don't, — I must have call'd you father.

Oh my wrack'd honour, ruin'd by those tyrants,
A cruell brother and a desperate dotage ! 145

There is no peace left for a ravish'd wife
Widdow'd by lawlesse marriage ; to all memory
Penthea's, poore Penthea's, name is strumpeted :
But since her blood was season'd by the forfeit
Of noble shame with mixtures of pollution, 150
Her blood — 'tis just — be henceforth never heightned

With tast of sustenance ! Starve ; let that fulnesse

Whose plurisie hath sever'd faith and modesty —
Forgive me : O, I faint !

Arm. Be not so wilfull,
Sweet neece, to worke thine owne destruction.

Itbo.

Nature 155

Will call her daughter monster, — what! not eat?

Refuse the onely ordinary meanes
Which are ordain'd for life? Be not, my sister,
A murthresse to thy selfe. — Hear'st thou this,
Bassanes?

Bass. Fo! I am busie: for I have not thoughts 160
Enow to thinke: all shall be well anon.
'Tis rumbling in my head: there is a mastery
In art to fatten and keepe smooth the outside,
Yes, and to comfort up the vitall spirits
Without the helpe of food; fumes or perfumes, 165
Perfumes or fumes. Let her alone; I'le search out
The tricke on't.

Pen. Lead me gently; heavens reward ye:
Griefes are sure friends; they leave, without controule,
Nor cure nor comforts for a leprous soule.

Exeunt the maids supporting Penthea.

Bass. I grant t'ee; and will put in practice instantly 170
What you shall still admire: 'tis wonderfull,
'Tis super singular, not to be match'd;
Yet when I've don't, I've don't; ye shall all thanke mee. Exit Bassanes.

Arm. The sight is full of terror.

Itho. On my soule

165 Q and G-D place a comma after food.

Lyes such an infinite clogge of massie dul-
 nesse, 175
 As that I have not sense enough to feele it. —
 See, uncle, th'angry thing returnes againe ; Shall's welcome him with thunder? We are haunted,
 And must use exorcisme to conjure downe
 This spirit of malevolence.

Arm. Mildly, nephew. 180

Enter Nearchus and Amelus.

Nearchus. I come not, sir, to chide your late disorder,
 Admitting that th'inurement to a roughnesse
 In souldiers of your yeares and fortunes, chiefly
 So lately prosperous, hath not yet shooke off
 The custome of the warre in houres of leisure ; 185
 Nor shall you need excuse, since y' are to render
 Account to that faire excellence, the princesse,
 Who in her private gallery expects it
 From your owne mouth alone : I am a messenger
 But to her pleasure.

Itho. Excellent Nearchus, 190
 Be prince still of my services, and conquer
 Without the combat of dispute ; I honour 'ee.

Near. The king is on a sudden indispos'd,

177 th'angry. So G-D. Q, th' augury.

Physicians are call'd for; 'twere fit, Armostes,
You should be neere him.

Arm. Sir, I kisse your hands. 195

Exeunt. Manent Nearchus & Amelus.

Near. Amelus, I perceive Calantha's bosome
Is warm'd with other fires then such as can Take strength from any fuell of the love
I might addresse to her: young Ithocles,
Or ever I mistake, is lord ascendant 200
Of her devotions; one, to speake him truly,
In every disposition nobly fashioned.

Amelus. But can your highnesse brooke to be so rival'd,

Considering th' inequality of the persons?

Near. I can, Amelus; for affections injur'd 205
By tyrannie or rigour of compulsion,
Like tempest-threatned trees unfirmely rooted,
Ne're spring to timely growth: observe, for instance,

Life-spent Penthea and unhappy Orgilus.

Amel. How does your grace determine?

Near. To be jealous 210

In publike of what privately I'le further;
And though they shall not know, yet they shall finde it.

Exeunt omnes.

SCENA TERTIA. An apartment in the palace.

Enter Hemophil and Groneas as leading Amyclas, and placing him in a chayre, followed by Armostes Crotolon, and Propphilus.

Amyclas. Our daughter is not neere ?

Armostes. She is retired, sir,

Into her gallery.

Amy. Where's the prince our cozen ?

Propphilus. New walk'd into the grove, my lord.

Amy. All leave us

Except Armostes, and you, Crotolon ;

We would be private.

Proph. Health unto your Majesty ! 5

Exeunt Propphilus, Hemophil & Groneas.

Amy. What ! Tecnicus is gone ?

Arm. He is, to Delphos ;

And to your royall hands presents this box.

Amy. Unseale it, good Armostes ; therein lyes
The secrets of the oracle ; out with it :

Apollo live our patron ! Read, Armostes. 10

Arm. *The plot in which the vine takes root
Begins to dry from head to foot ;
The stocke soone withering, want of sap
Doth cause to quaille the budding grape :
But from the neighboring elme a dew
Shall drop and feed the plot anew.* 15

Amy. That is the oracle : what exposition
Makes the philosopher ?

Arm. This brief one onely :

*The plot is Sparta, the dry'd vine the king;
The quailing grape his daughter ; but the thing*

20

*Of most importance, not to be reveal'd,
Is a neere prince, the elme ; the rest con-ceal'd.*

Tecnicus.

Amy. Enough ; although the opening of this riddle

Is but it selfe a riddle, yet we construe

25

How neere our lab'ring age drawes to a rest :

But must Calantha quaile too ? that young grape

Untimely budded ! I could mourne for her ;

Her tendernesse hath yet deserv'd no rigor

So to be crost by fate.

Arm. You misapply, sir, —

30

With favour let me speake it, — what Apollo

Hath clouded in hid sense : I here conjecture

Her marriage with some neighb'ring prince, the dew

Of which befriending elme shall ever strengthen

Your subjects with a sovereignty of power.

35

27 too ? So G-D. Q, to ; no mark of punctuation.

Crotolon. Besides, most gracious lord, the pith of oracles
Is to be then digested when th'events Expound their truth, not brought assoone to light
As utter'd ; Truth is child of Time ; and herein
I finde no scruple, rather cause of comfort, 40
With unity of kingdomes.

Amy. May it prove so,
For weale of this deare nation! — Where is Ithocles? —

Armostes, Crotolon, when this wither'd vine
Of my fraile carkasse on the funerall pile
Is fir'd into its ashes, let that young man 45
Be hedg'd about still with your cares and loves ;
Much owe I to his worth, much to his service. —

Let such as wait come in now.

Arm. All attend here !

Enter Ithocles, Calantha, Prophilus, Orgilus, Euphranea, Hemophil, and Groneas.

Calantha. Deare sir ! king ! father !

Ithocles. O, my royall master !

Amy. Cleave not my heart, sweet twins of my life's solace, 50
With your fore-judging feares : there is no phy-sicke
So cunningly restorative to cherish

The fall of age, or call backe youth and vigor,
 As your consents in duty : I will shake off
 This languishing disease of time, to quicken 55
 Fresh pleasures in these drooping houres of sadnesse.

Is faire Euphranea married yet to Prophilus ?

Crot. This morning, gracious lord.

Orgilus. This very morning ;
 Which, with your highnesse leave, you may observe too.

Our sister lookes, me thinks, mirthfull and sprightly, 60

As if her chaster fancy could already Expound the riddle of her gaine in losing
 A trifle maids know onely that they know not.
 Pish ! prethe, blush not ; 'tis but honest change
 Of fashion in the garment, loose for streight, 65
 And so the modest maid is made a wife :
 Shrewd busnesse, is't not, sister ?

Euphranea. You are pleasant.

Amy. We thanke thee, Orgilus ; this mirth becomes thee :

But wherefore sits the court in such a silence ?
 A wedding without revels is not seemely. 70

Cal. Your late indisposition, sir, forbade it.

Amy. Be it thy charge, Calantha, to set forward

The bridall sports, to which I will be present, —

If not, at least consenting. Mine owne Ithocles,
I have done little for thee yet.

Itho. Y'have built me 75

To the full height I stand in.

Cal. Now or never

May I propose a suit ?

Amy. Demand, and have it.

Cal. Pray, sir, give me this young man, and no further

Account him yours then he deserves in all things
To be thought worthy mine ; I will esteeme him 80
According to his merit.

Amy. Still th'art my daughter,
Still grow'st upon my heart. Give me thine hand;
Calantha take thine owne ; in noble actions
Thou'lt find him firme and absolute. I would not Have parted with thee, Ithocles, to any 85
But to a mistresse who is all what I am.

Itho. A change, great king, most wisht for, cause the sam[e].

Cal. Th' art mine. — Have I now kept my word ?

Itho. Divinely.

Org. Rich fortunes, guard to favour of a princesse,

76 Now or never. G-D, [aside] Now or never ! —

89 Rich . . . princesse. G-D, Rich fortunes guard, the favour of a princess. fortunes. Q, fortuness.

Rocke thee, brave man, in ever crowned plenty ; 90
Y' are minion of the time ; be thankfull for it. —

[Aside.] Ho, here's a swinge in destiny — apparent !

The youth is up on tiptoe, yet may stumble.

Amy. On to your recreations. — Now convey me

Unto my bed-chamber : none on his forehead 95
Were a distempered looke.

Omnes. The gods preserve 'ee !

Cal. [aside to Ith.]. Sweet, be not from my sight.

Ith. [aside to Cal.]. My whole felicity.

*Exeunt carrying out the king ; Orgilus stays
Ithocles.*

Org. Shall I be bold, my lord ?

Itho. Thou canst not, Orgilus ;
Call me thine owne, for Prophilus must henceforth

Be all thy sisters ; friendship, though it cease not 100
In marriage, yet is oft at lesse command

Then when a single freedome can dispose it.

Org. Most right, my most good lord, my most great lord,

My gracious princely lord, — I might adde, royall.

Itho. Royall ! a subject royall ?

Org. Why not, pray, sir ? 105

The sovereignty of kingdomes in their nonage Stoop'd to desert, not birth; there's as much merit

In clearenesse of affection as in puddle
Of generation: you have conquer'd love
Even in the loveliest; if I greatly erre not, 110
The sonne of Venus hath bequeathed his quiver
To Ithocles his manage, by whose arrowes
Calantha's brest is open'd.

Itho. Can't be possible?

Org. I was my selfe a peece of suitor once,
And forward in preferment too; so forward, 115
That, speaking truth, I may without offence, sir,
Presume to whisper that my hopes and, harke 'ee,
My certainty of marriage stood assured
With as firme footing, by your leave, as any's
Now at this very instant — but —

Itho. 'Tis granted: 120

And for a league of privacy betweene us,
Read o're my bosome and pertake a secret;
The princesse is contracted mine.

Org. Still, why not?

I now applaud her wisdome; when your kingdome
Stands seated in your will secure and settled, 125
I dare pronounce you will be a just monarch:
Greece must admire and tremble.

Itho. Then the sweetnesse

Of so imparadis'd a comfort, Orgilus!
It is to banquet with the gods.

Org. The glory
Of numerous children, potency of nobles, 130
Bent knees, hearts pav'd to tread on!

Itho. With a friendship
So deare, so fast as thine.

Org. I am unfitting
For office, but for service—

Itho. Wee'll distinguish
Our fortunes meerely in the title; partners
In all respects else but the bed.

Org. The bed! 135
Forefend it Joves owne jealousy, till lastly
We slip downe in the common earth together;
And there our beds are equall, save some monument

To shew this was the king, and this the subject.
List, what sad sounds are these? — extremely sad ones. 140

Itho. Sure from Penthea's lodgings.

Org. Harke! a voyce too.

Soft sad musicke. A song.

*Oh, no more, no more, too late
Sighes are spent; the burning tapers
Of a life as chaste as fate,
Pure as are unwritten papers,*

*Are burnt out : no heat, no light
 Now remaines ; 'tis ever night.
 Love is dead ; let lovers eyes,
 Lock'd in endlesse dreames,
 Th' extremes of all extremes,* 150
*Ope no more, for now Love dyes,
 Now Love dyes, implying
 Loves martyrs must be ever, ever dying.*

Itho. Oh my misgiving heart !

Org. A horrid stilnesse
 Succeeds this deathfull ayre ; let's know the reason :

Tread softly ; there is mystery in mourning.

Exeunt. 155

[SCENA QUARTA. Apartment of Penthea in the palace.]

Enter Christalla and Philema, bringing in Penthea in a chaire, vaild; two other servants placing two chaires, one on the one side, and the other with an engine on the other. The maids sit downe at her feet mourning ; the servants goe out ; meet them Ithocles and Orgilus.

Servant [aside to Orgilus]. 'Tis done ; that on her right hand.

Orgilus. Good : begone.

[Exeunt servants.]

Ithocles. Soft peace inrich this roome.

Org. How fares the lady ?

Philema. Dead !

Christalla. Dead !

Phil. Starv'd !

Chris. Starv'd !

Itho. Me miserable !

Org. Tell us

How parted she from life ?

Phil. She call'd for musicke,
And begg'd some gentle voyce to tune a farewell

To life and griefes : Christalla touch'd the lute ;
I wept the funerall song.

Chris. Which scarce was ended,
But her last breath seal'd up these hollow sounds,
“ O cruell Ithocles and injur'd Orgilus ! ”
So downe she drew her vaile, so dy'd.

Itho. So dy'd ! 10

Org. Up ! you are messengers of death ; goe from us ;

Here's woe enough to court without a prompter.
Away ; and, harke ye, till you see us next,
No sillable that she is dead. — Away !

Exeunt Phil. and Chri.

Keepe a smooth brow. — My lord, —

Itho. Mine onely sister ! 15
Another is not left me.

Org. Take that chayre ;

I'le seat me here in this : betweene us sits
 The object of our sorrowes ; some few teares
 Wee'll part among us ; I perhaps can mixe
 One lamentable story to prepare 'em. 20
 There, there, sit there, my lord.

Itho. Yes, as you please.

Ithocles sits downe, and is catcht in the engine.

What meanes this treachery ?

Org. Caught, you are caught,
 Young master : 'tis thy throne of coronation,
 Thou foole of greatnesse ! See, I take this vaile off ;
 Survey a beauty wither'd by the flames 25
 Of an insulting Phaeton, her brother.

Itho. Thou mean'st to kill me basely.

Org. I foreknew
 The last act of her life, and train'd thee hither
 To sacrifice a tyrant to a turtle.
 You dream't of kingdomes, did 'ee ? how to bosome 30

The delicacies of a youngling princesse ;
 How with this nod to grace that subtill courtier,
 How with that frowne to make this noble tremble,
 And so forth ; whiles Penthea's grones and tortures,
 Her agonies, her miseries, afflictions, 35
 Ne're toucht upon your thought ; as for my injuries,
 Alas, they were beneath your royall pitty ;

But yet they liv'd, thou proud man, to confound
thee :

Behold thy fate, this steele !

Itho. Strike home ! A courage
As keene as thy revenge shall give it welcome : 40
But, prethe, faint not ; if the wound close up,
Tent it with double force, and search it deeply.
Thou look'st that I should whine and beg compassion,

As loath to leave the vainnesse of my glories ;
A statelier resolution armes my confidence, 45
To cozen thee of honour ; neither could I,
With equall tryall of unequall fortune,
By hazard of a duell ; 'twere a bravery
Too mighty for a slave intending murther :
On to the execution, and inherit 50
A conflict with thy horrors.

Org. By Apollo,
Thou talk'st a goodly language ! for requitall,
I will report thee to thy mistresse richly :
And take this peace along ; some few short minutes
Determin'd, my resolves shall quickly follow 55
Thy wrathfull ghost ; then, if we tug for mastery,
Pentheas sacred eyes shall lend new courage.
Give me thy hand ; be healthfull in thy parting
From lost mortality ! thus, thus, I free it.

Stabs him.

59 Stabs him. Q, Kils him.

ACTUS QUINTUS : SCAENA PRIMA.

A room in Bassanes' house.

Enter Bassanes alone.

Bassanes. Athens, to Athens I have sent, the nursery
Of Greece for learning and the fount of knowledge :

For here in Sparta there's not left amongst us
One wise man to direct; we're all turn'd madcaps.

'Tis said Apollo is the god of herbs ; 5
Then certainly he knowes the vertue of 'em :
To Delphos I have sent to ; if there can be
A helpe for nature, we are sure yet.

Enter Orgilus.

Orgilus. Honour
Attend thy counsels ever!

Bass. I beseech thee
With all my heart, let me goe from thee quietly ; 10
I will not ought to doe with thee, of all men.
The doublers of a hare, or, in a morning,
Salutes from a splay-footed witch, to drop
Three drops of blood at th'nose just and no
more,

Croaking of ravens, or the screech of owles, 15
 Are not so boading mischiefe as thy crossing
 My private meditations : shun me, prethe ;
 And if I cannot love thee hartily,
 I'le love thee as well as I can.

Org. Noble Bassanes,
 Mistake me not.

Bass. Phew! Then we shall be troubled. 20
 Thou wert ordain'd my plague, heaven make me thankfull;
 And give me patience too, heaven, I beseech
 thee.

Org. Accept a league of amity ; for henceforth,

I vow by my best Genius, in a sillable,
 Never to speake vexation ; I will study 25
 Service and friendship with a zealous sorrow
 For my past incivility towards 'ee.

Bass. Heydey! good words, good words! I must beleeve 'em,
 And be a coxcombe for my labor.

Org. Use not
 So hard a language; your misdoubt is cause-
 lesse: 30

For instance : if you promise to put on
 A constancy of patience, such a patience
 As chronicle or history ne're mentioned,
 As followes not example, but shall stand

A wonder and a theame for imitation, 35
 The first, the index pointing to a second,
 I will acquaint 'ee with an unmatch'd secret
 Whose knowledge to your griefes shall set a period.

Bass. Thou canst not, Orgilus; 'tis in the power

Of the gods onely; yet, for satisfaction, 40
 Because I note an earnest in thine utterance,
 Unforc'd and naturally free, be resolute
 The virgin bayes shall not withstand the lightning

With a more carelesse danger than my constancy

The full of thy relation; could it move 45
 Distraction in a senselesse marble statue,
 It should finde me a rocke: I doe expect now
 Some truth of unheard moment.

Org. To your patience
 You must adde privacie, as strong in silence
 As mysteries lock'd up in Joves owne bosome. 50

Bass. A skull hid in the earth a treble age,
 Shall sooner prate.

Org. Lastly, to such direction
 As the severity of a glorious action
 Deserves to lead your wisdome and your judgement,
 You ought to yeeld obedience.

Bass. With assurance 55
Of will and thankfulness.

Org. With manly courage
Please then to follow me.

Bass. Where e're, I feare not.

Exeunt omnes.

SCAENE 2. [A room of state in the palace.]

Loud musicke. Enter Groneas and Hemophil leading Euphranea; Christalla and Philema leading Propphilus; Nearchus supporting Calantha; Crotolon, and Amelus. Cease loud musicke; all make a stand.

Calantha. We misse our servant Ithocles and Orgilus;
On whom attend they?

Crotolon. My sonne, gracious princesse, Whisper'd some new device, to which these revels

Should be but usher; wherein I conceive
Lord Ithocles and he himselfe are actors.

Cal. A faire excuse for absence: as for Bassanes,

Delights to him are troublesome; Armostes
Is with the king?

Crot. He is.

Cal. On to the dance!

Deare cozen, hand you the bride; the bridegroome must be
 Intrusted to my courtship: be not jealous, 10
 Euphranea; I shall scarcely prove a temptresse.
 Fall to our dance.

Musicke. Nearchus dances with Euphranea, Propbilus with Calantha, Christalla with Hemophil, Philema with Groneas. Dance the first change; during which, enter Armostenes.

Armostenes. The king your father's dead.
In Calantha's eare.

Cal. To the other change.

Arm. Is't possible?

Dance againe. Enter Bassanes.

Bassanes [whispers Cal.]. O, madam!
 Penthea, poore Penthea's starv'd.

Cal. Beshrew thee!
 Lead to the next.

Bass. Amazement duls my senses. 15

Dance againe. Enter Orgilus.

Orgilus [whispers Cal.]. Brave Ithocles is murther'd, murther'd cruelly.

Cal. How dull this musicke sounds! strike up more sprightly;
 Our footings are not active like our heart,
 Which treads the nimbler measure.

Org. I am thunder-strooke.

Last change. Cease musicke.

Cal. So, let us breath a while: — hath not this motion 20

Rais'd fresher colour on your cheeks?

Near. Sweet princesse,
A perfect purity of blood enamels
The beauty of your white.

Cal. We all looke cheerfully:
And, cozen, 'tis, me thinks, a rare presumption
In any who prefers our lawfull pleasures 25
Before their owne sowre censure, to interrupt
The custome of this ceremony bluntly.

Near. None dares, lady.

Cal. Yes, yes; some hollow voyce deliver'd to me
How that the king was dead.

Arm. The king is dead. 30
That fatall newes was mine; for in mine armes
He breath'd his last, and with his crowne be-queath'd 'ee

Your mothers wedding ring, which here I tender.

Crot. Most strange!

Cal. Peace crown his ashes!
We are queen, then. 35

Near. Long live Calantha! Sparta's soveraigne queene!

Omnes. Long live the queene!

Cal. What whispered Bassanes?

Bass. That my Penthea, miserable soule,
Was starv'd to death.

Cal. Shee's happy; she hath finish'd
A long and painefull progresse. — A third mur-mure

40

Pierc'd mine unwilling eares.

Org. That Ithocles
Was murther'd; rather butcher'd, had not bravery
Of an undaunted spirit, conquering terror,
Proclaim'd his last act triumph over ruine.

Arm. How! murther'd!

Cal. By whose hand?

Org. By mine; this weapon 45
Was instrument to my revenge: the reasons
Are just and knowne; quit him of these, and then

Never liv'd gentleman of greater merit,
Hope, or abiliment to steere a kingdome.

Crot. Fye, Orgilus!

Euphranea. Fye, brother!

Cal. You have done it. 50

Bass. How it was done let him report, the forfeit

Of whose alleagance to our lawes doth covet
Rigour of justice; but that done it is Mine eyes have beene an evidence of credit
Too sure to be convinc'd. Armostes, rent not 55

Thine arteries with hearing the bare circumstances

Of these calamities : thou'st lost a nephew,
A neece, and I a wife : continue man still ;
Make me the patterne of digesting evils,
Who can out-live my mighty ones, not shrinking

60

At such a pressure as would sinke a soule
Into what's most of death, the worst of horrors.
But I have seal'd a covenant with sadnesse,
And enter'd into bonds without condition
To stand these tempests calmely ; marke me, nobles,

65

I doe not shed a teare, not for Penthea !
Excellent misery !

Cal. We begin our reigne
With a first act of justice: thy confession,
Unhappy Orgilus, doomes thee a sentence ;
But yet thy fathers or thy sisters presence
Shall be excus'd: give, Crotolon, a blessing
To thy lost sonne: Euphranea, take a farewell,
And both be gone.

70

Crot. [to Org.]. Confirme thee, noble sorrow,
In worthy resolution.

Euph. Could my teares speake,
My griefes were sleight.

Org. All goodnesse dwell amongst yee : 75

75 goodnesse. Q, gooddesse.

Enjoy my sister, Prophilus; my vengeance
Aym'd never at thy prejudice.

Cal. Now withdraw.

Exeunt Crotolon, Prophilus & Euphranea.

Bloody relator of thy staines in blood,
For that thou hast reported him whose fortunes
And life by thee are both at once snatch'd from him, 80

With honourable mention, make thy choyce
Of what death likes thee best; there's all our bounty.

But to excuse delayes, let me, deare cozen,
Intreat you and these lords see execution
Instant before 'ee part.

Near. Your will commands us. 85

Org. One suit, just queene, my last; vouchsafe your clemency

That by no common hand I be divided
From this my humble frailty.

Cal. To their wisdomes

Who are to be spectators of thine end
I make the reference: those that are dead 90
Are dead; had they not now dy'd, of necessity
They must have payd the debt they ow'd to nature

One time or other. — Use dispatch, my lords;
Wee'll suddenly prepare our coronation.

Exeunt Calantha, Philema, Christalla.

Arm. 'Tis strange these tragedies should never touch on 95
Her female pitty.

Bass. She has a masculine spirit :
And wherefore should I pule, and, like a girle,
Put finger in the eye ? let's be all toughnesse,
Without distinction betwixt sex and sex.

Near. Now, Orgilus, thy choyce.

Org. To bleed to death. 100

Arm. The executioner ?

Org. My selfe, no surgeon ;
I am well skill'd in letting blood. Bind fast
This arme, that so the pipes may from their conduits

Convey a full streame. Here's a skilfull instrument :

Onely I am a beggar to some charity 105
To speed me in this execution
By lending th'other pricke to th'tother arme,
When this is bubling life out.

Bass. I am for 'ee.
It most concernes my art, my care, my credit ;
Quicke, fillet both his armes.

Org. Gramercy, friendship ! 110
Such curtesies are reall which flow cheerefully
Without an expectation of requitall.
Reach me a staffe in this hand. If a pronenesse

110 his. Q, this.

112 expectation. Q, expectation.

Or custome in my nature from my cradle
 Had beene inclin'd to fierce and eager bloodshed, 115

A coward guilt, hid in a coward quaking,
 Would have betray'd [my] fame to ignoble flight
 And vagabond pursuit of dreadfull safety :

But looke upon my steddinesse, and scorne not
 The sicknesse of my fortune, which since Bassanes 120

Was husband to Penthea had laine bed-rid :
 We trifle time in words : thus I shew cunning
 In opening of a veine too full, too lively.

Arm. Desperate courage !

Org. Honourable infamy !

Hemophil. I tremble at the sight.

Groneas. Would I were loose ! 125

Bass. It sparkles like a lusty wine new broacht ;

The vessell must be sound from which it issues.

Graspe hard this other sticke: I'le be as nimble —
 But prethe, looke not pale — have at 'ee ! stretch
 out

Thine arme with vigor and unshooke vertue. 130

[Opens the vein.]

117 betray'd my fame. Q omits my. G-D, betray'd me.

124 Honourable infamy. So Q. G-D gives this speech to Nearchus.

130 unshooke. G-D, unshak[en].

Good! O, I envy not a rivall fitted
 To conquer in extremities; this pastime
 Appeares majesticall: some high tun'd poem
 Hereafter shall deliver to posterity
 The writers glory and his subjects triumph. 135
 How is't man? droope not yet.

Org. I feele no palsies:
 On a paire royall doe I wait in death;
 My soveraigne, as his liegeman; on my mistresse,
 As a devoted servant; and on Ithocles,
 As if no brave, yet no unworthy enemy: 140
 Nor did I use an engine to intrap
 His life, out of a slavish feare to combate
 Youth, strength, or cunning, but for that I durst
 not

Ingage the goodnesse of a cause on fortune,
 By which his name might have out-fac'd my
 vengeance. 145

Oh, Tecnicus, inspir'd with Phoebus fire!

I call to mind thy augury, 'twas perfect;

Revenge proves its owne executioner.

When feeble man is bending to his mother,
 The dust 'a was first fram'd on, thus he totters. 150

Bass. Life's fountaine is dry'd up.

Org. So falls the standards
 Of my prerogative in being a creature!
 A mist hangs o're mine eyes; the sun's bright splendor

Is clouded in an everlasting shadow :

Welcome thou yce that sit'st about my heart, 155

No heat can ever thaw thee. Dyes.

Near. Speech hath left him.

Bass. A' has shooke hands with time: his funerall urne

Shall be my charge : remove the bloodlesse bodie.

The coronation must require attendance ;

That past, my few dayes can be but one mourning. Exeunt. 160

[SCENA TERTIA. A temple.]

An altar covered with white ; two lights of virgin wax. Musicke of recorders ; during which enter foure bearing Ithocles on a bea[r]se or in a chaire, in a rich robe, and a crowne on his head ; place him on one side of the altar. After him enter Calantha in a white robe and crown'd ; Euphranea, Philema, Christalla in white ; Nearchus, Armotes, Crotolon, Prophilus, Amelus, Bassanes, Hemophil, and Groneas. Calantha goes and kneeles before the altar, the rest stand off, the women kneeling behind. Cease recorders during her devotions. Sof[t]e musicke. Calantha and the rest rise, doing obeysance to the altar.

Calantha. Our orisons are heard ; the gods are mercifull.

Now tell me, you whose loyalties payes tribute

To us your lawfull soveraigne, how unskilfull
 Your duties or obedience is to render Subjection to the scepter of a virgin, 5
 Who have beene ever fortunate in princes
 Of masculine and stirring composition.
 A woman has enough to governe wisely
 Her owne demeanours, passions, and divisions.
 A nation warlike and inur'd to practice 10
 Of policy and labour cannot brooke
 A feminate authority: we therefore Command your counsaile, how you may advise us

In choosing of a husband whose abilities
 Can better guide this kingdome.

Nearchus.

Royall lady, 15

Your law is in your will.

Armostes.

We have seene tokens
 Of constancy too lately to mistrust it.

Crotolon. Yet if your highnesse settle on a choice

By your owne judgement both allow'd and lik'd
 of,

Sparta may grow in power, and proceed 20
 To an increasing height.

Cal.

Hold you the same minde?

Bass. Alas, great mistris, reason is so clouded
 With the thicke darkenesse of my infinite woes

That I forecast nor dangers, hopes, or safety.
 Give me some corner of the world to weare out 25
 The remnant of the minutes I must number,
 Where I may heare no sounds but sad complaints

Of virgins who have lost contracted partners;
 Of husbands howling that their wives were rav-isht

By some untimely fate; of friends divided 30
 By churlish opposition; or of fathers
 Weeping upon their childrens slaughtered carcasses;

Or daughters groaning ore their fathers hearses;
 And I can dwell there, and with these keepe consort

As musicall as theirs. What can you looke for 35
 From an old, foolish, peevish, doting man
 But crasinesse of age?

Cal. Cozen of Argos.

Near. Madam.

Cal. Were I presently
 To choose you for my lord, Ile open freely
 What articles I would propose to treat on 40
 Before our marriage.

Near. Name them, vertuous lady.

Cal. I would presume you would retaine the royalty
 Of Sparta in her owne bounds; then in Argos

Armostes might be viceroy; in Messene
Might Crotolon beare sway; and Bassanes — 45

Bass. I, queene! alas, what I?

Cal. Be Sparta's marshall:
The multitudes of high employments could not But set a peace to private griefes. These gentlemen,

Groneas and Hemophil, with worthy pensions
Should wait upon your person in your chamber. 50
I would bestow Christalla on Amelus,
Shee'll prove a constant wife; and Philema
Should into Vesta's temple.

Bass. This is a testament!
It sounds not like conditions on a marriage.

Near. All this should be perform'd.

Cal. Lastly, for Prophilus, 55
He should be, cozen, solemnly invested
In all those honors, titles, and preferments
Which his deare friend and my neglected husband

Too short a time enjoy'd.

Prophilus. I am unworthy
To live in your remembrance.

Euphranea. Excellent lady! 60

Near. Madam, what meanes that word, "neglected husband"?

Cal. Forgive me: now I turne to thee, thou shadow

A Song

All. *Glories, pleasures, pomps, delights, and ease,
Can but please*

[Th'] *outward senses, when the mind
Is not untroubled, or by peace refin'd.*

1 Crownes may flourish and decay, 85
Beauties shine, but fade away.

2 Youth may revell, yet it must Lye downe in a bed of dust.

3 Earthly honors flow and wast,
Time alone doth change and last. 90

All. Sorrowes mingled with contents prepare Rest for care ;

*Love onely reignes in death: though art
Can fnd no comfort for a broken heart.*

[Calantha dies.]

Arm. Looke to the queene.

Bass. Her heart is broke indeed. 95
O royall maid, would thou hadst mist this part!

Yet 'twas a brave one: I must weepe to see
Her smile in death.

Arm. Wise Tecnicus! thus said he:

*When youth is ripe, and age from time doth part,
The livelesse trunke shall wed the broken heart.* 100

'Tis here fulfill'd.

83 Th'. Q is defective in printing here.

84 Is not. G-D, Is [or].

Near. I am your king.

Omnes. Long live

Nearchus, King of Sparta!

Near. Her last will

Shall never be digrest from: wait in order

Upon these faithfull lovers as becomes us.

The counsels of the gods are never knowne,¹⁰⁵

Till men can call th' effects of them their owne.

FINIS.

THE EPILOGUE.

*Where noble judgements and cleare eyes are fix'd
To grace endeavour, there sits truth not mix'd
With ignorance; those censures may command
Beleeve which talke not till they understand.*

Let some say, "This was flat"; some, "Here the scene

5

*Fell from its height"; Another that "the meane
Was ill observ'd in such a growing passion
As it transcended either state or fashion":*

*Some few may cry, "'Twas pretty well," or so,
"But, —" and there shrugge in silence: yet we know*

10

*Our writers ayme was in the whole addrest
Well to deserve of all, but please the best;
Which granted, by th' allowance of this straine
THE BROKEN HEART may be piec't up againe.*

FINIS

Notes to The Broken Heart

For the meaning of single words see the Glossary.

William, Lord Craven. Born in 1606, Craven entered as a commoner at Trinity College, Oxford, in 1623, but before he was twenty he was enlisted in the service of the Prince of Orange. He gained some military distinction under Maurice and his successor Frederick Henry, and on returning to England was knighted by Charles I, 4 March, 1627. Eight days later he was created Baron Craven of Hampsted Marshall, and not long afterward was named a member of the permanent council of war. In 1631 he was one of the commanders of the English forces sent to the aid of Gustavus Adolphus. In 1632 he was wounded at the siege of Kreuznach, where he distinguished himself by his valor. Returning to England, he was placed, May 12th, 1633, on the council of Wales, and on the 31st of August his university created him Master of Arts. It would appear that Ford's dedication to him of The Broken Heart in this same year was part of a general welcome accorded to a romantic young hero. There is a tradition that Lord Craven was married to the Queen of Bohemia, daughter to James I; it is certain that he displayed a generous and life-long attachment to her cause.

For further details, see the Dictionary of National Biography.

138, 16. a truth. In the quarto a, and the initial t, are capitalized and all the letters are printed in the blackest and most emphatic type. Similar assurance is given on the title page of Perkin Warbeck, which is called "a strange truth"; and on the title page of the Witch of Edmonton — "a known true story."

147, 43-4. He . . . fixt. Cf. The Sun's Darling, v, i:

"O, may you all, like stars, while swift time moves, Stand fix'd in firmaments of blest content."

148, 66. provincially garland. "The wreath (of laurel) which she had prepared; and which the ancients conferred on those who, like Ithocles, had added a province to the empire." Gifford. Weber compared the passage in Hamlet, III, ii, where Provincial means of Provence; the Oxford English Dictionary adopts this interpretation of the passage in The Broken Heart.

149, 79-81. Whom heaven . . . madding. Cf. The Sun's Darling, IV, i:

" Whom the creatures
Of every age and quality post madding
From land and sea to meet
Shall wait upon thy nod, Fortune and Cupid."

149, 89. These fit sleights. This slighting language suitable to slight services.

151, 125. I have not put my love to use. The language of money-lenders: I have not lent my love to any one, hoping returns.

152, 132. In forma pauperis. In the character of a poor man. "Paupers, or such as will swear themselves not worth five pounds, are to have original writs and subpoenas gratis, and counsel and attorney assigned them without fee, and are excused from paying costs when plaintiff." W. C. Anderson's Dictionary of Law.

154, 21-2. malice of present hopes. The misfortunes which my present hopes have met.

159, 116. Mew! — asburd! "A term of the schools, and is used when false conclusions are illogically deduced from the opponent's premises." Gifford.

159, 117. The metaphysicks are but speculations. Compare with this and the preceding statement about philosophy Bacon's arraignment of the "degenerate learning" of the schoolmen in the first book of the Advancement of Learning: "For the wit and mind of man, if it work upon matter, which is the contemplation of the creatures of God, worketh according to the stuff, and is limited thereby; but if it work upon itself, as the spider worketh his web, then it is endless, and brings forth indeed cobwebs of learning, admirable for the fineness of thread and work, but of no substance or profit." Bacon's Works, London, 1902, pp. 242-243.

163, 1. I'll have that window . . . dam'd up. The parallelism of the situations makes one suspect this to be an echo of "First, I will have this wicked light damned up," Volpone, II, iii.

163, 5-6. the deformed bear-whelpe . . . into the act. Cf. Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, London, 1907, vol. 1, p. 30: "I must for that cause do my business myself, and was therefore enforced, as a Bear doth her whelps, to bring forth this confused lump, I had not time to lick it into form, as she doth her young ones." This notion is of hoary antiquity: see Sir Thomas Browne's Pseudodoxia Epidemica, bk. III, chap. 6.

164, 26-7. the head Which they have branch'd. An allusion to the familiar notion that horns grow on the forehead of a man whose wife has been unfaithful to him.

165, 45-6. the king . . . gray beard. This piece of news is curiously matched as a specimen of court gossip by a passage in a letter from the Rev. Jos. Mead to Sir Martin Stuteville, dated at Christ's College, Feb. 22, 1627-8: "On Thursday was sennight, his grace's second heir was christened at Wallingford House. . . . His majesty came hither apparelled in a long soldier's coat, all covered with gold lace, and his hair all gaufred and frizzled, which he never used before." The whole passage on news, however, seems modeled on Volpone, II, i.

168, 103-5. This house, methinks, . . . Nearer the court. Apparently an echo of Women Beware Women, III, i:

"Methinks this house stands nothing to my mind;
I'd have some pleasant lodging i' the high street, sir;
Or if 't were near the court, sir, that were much better."

177-8, 117-125. Brothers and sisters . . . Is in request. In Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy (part III, sect. III, mem. II), the character of the morbidly jealous man is very minutely analyzed: "He will sometimes sigh, weep, sob for anger . . . swear and belie, slander any man, curse, threaten, brawl, scold, fight; and sometimes again flatter, and speak fair, ask forgiveness, kiss and coll, condemn his rashness and folly, vow, protest and swear he will never do so again; and then eftsoons, impatient as he is, rave, roar, and lay about him like a madman . . . so he continues off and on, as the toy takes him . . . accusing and suspecting not strangers only, but Brothers and Sisters, Fathers and Mothers, nearest and dearest friends." That this description so accurately applies to Bassanes is probably not accidental. The influence of Burton's treatise would sufficiently explain what Gifford looked upon as unnatural inconsistencies in the character of Bassanes.

180, 21-4. What heaven . . . perfection? This sentiment may profitably be compared with a passage in Ford's Honour Triumphant: "The self alone means, therefore, that were to be ordained for a provocation and incitement to livelihood of manhood was the quintessence, rarity, yea, rare quintessence of divine astonishment, Beauty." Works, vol. III, p. 352.

185, 125. Politicke French. It is difficult to understand where Orgilus acquired this tongue.

196, 109. My treasons. For a subject to aspire to the hand of the heir to the throne might be construed as treasonable.

198, 149-150. Franks . . . swine-security. An allusion "to the small enclosures (franks, as distinguished from styes) in which boars were fattened." Gifford.

219, 21-2. grace my hopes . . . livery. Give me some badge to wear as a sign that I am enrolled as your servant.

223, 102-4. Painted colts . . . lion. "Our old writers used colt . . . for a compound of rudeness and folly. . . . It would seem that there is also an allusion to some allegorical representation of this kind in 'the painted cloth.'" Gifford. It was a popular belief that lions were afraid of virgins, cocks, and the blood royal; a herald's coat adorned with the king's insignia might be presumed to have the same awe-inspiring power.

225, 120-1. The hurts are yet but mortall . . . deadly. Gifford thinks that the press here confused but and not; otherwise, he says, it is not easy to discover how the author distinguished mortal from deadly, "unless, indeed, he adopted the vulgar phraseology of his native place, and used 'mortal' in the sense of very great, extreme, &c."

227, 14-15. hony-combe of honesty. The garland of good-will. "The Honeycomb of Honesty, like the 'Garland of Good Will,' was probably one of the popular miscellanies of the day." Gifford. The date of the publication of the Garland of Good Will is given by Weber as 1631. Weber also notes another allusion to it in Rowley's Match at Midnight, which was printed in 1633. It was reprinted by the Percy Society, from the edition of 1678, in vol. 30, 1851.

235, 162-5. there is a mastery . . . food. There is a contemporary ballad in the Shirburn collection "Of a maide now dwelling at the towne of meurs in dutchland, that hath not taken any foode this 16 yeares, and is not yet neither hungry nor thirsty; the which maide hath lately beene presented to the lady elizabeth, the king's daughter of england." This "maide" subsisted in the manner proposed by Bassanes — on perfumes.

" My pure unspotted mind prevaile
according to my will,
And so my life preservèd is by smelling flow-ers still."

Shirburn Ballads. Oxford, 1907, pp. 55-56.

246. the other with an engine. Some simple mechanical contrivance for holding fast the occupant of the chair. The same device is introduced in a play by Ford's friend Barnabe Barnes, The Devil's Charter (1607), 1, 5. See G. D. vol. 1, p. 302 for other references.

257, 55. Too sure to be convinc'd. Gifford observes that "convince is used here in the primitive sense of conquered, overthrown."

268, 81-4. Glories . . . peace refin'd. Gifford says "I can only reduce it to some tolerable meaning by reading 'or' before 'untroubled' instead of 'not.' But if one properly emphasizes "outward" the sense of the quarto is sufficiently clear, in spite of the slight obscurity of the double negative: glories . . . can please only the outward senses when the mind is troubled or not refined by peace.

Bibliography

The place of publication is London unless otherwise indicated.

I. TEXTS

A. COLLECTIVE EDITIONS

1811. 8vo. THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF JOHN FORD. With an introduction and explanatory notes by Henry Weber. Edinburgh. 2 vols.

1827. 8vo. THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF JOHN FORD. With notes critical and explanatory by W. Gifford, Esq. To which are added Fame's Memorial, and Verses to the Memory of Ben Jonson. 2 vols. [Contains the violent exposure of Weber, which was omitted by Dyce in 1869.]

1839. 8vo. THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF MASSINGER AND FORD. With an introduction by Hartley Coleridge. Reissued 1840, 1848, 1851, etc.

1869. 8vo. THE WORKS OF JOHN FORD. With notes critical and explanatory by William Gifford, Esq. A new edition, carefully revised, with additions to the text and to the notes by the Rev. Alexander Dyce. 3 vols.

1895. 8vo. THE WORKS OF JOHN FORD. Edited by William Gifford with additions by Rev. Alexander Dyce. Now reissued with further additions [by A. H. Bullen].

1908. JOHN FORDES DRAMATISCHE WERKE. In Neudruck herausgegeben von W. Bang. Erster Band. Mit einem einleitenden Essay: Forde's Contribution to the Decadence of the Drama von S. P. Sherman und einem Neudruck von Dekkers Penny-Wise, Pound-Foolish. Louvain, Leipzig, London. [Contains The Lover's Melancholy and Love's Sacrifice, reproducing the spelling of the original quartos. Issued as Band XXIII of Materialien zur Kunde des älteren Englischen Dramas.]

B. ORIGINAL EDITIONS

1606. 4to. FAME'S MEMORIAL, OR THE EARLE OF DEVONSHIRE DECEASED. With his honourable life, peacefull end and sollemn Funerall. [British Museum.]

1606. 4to. HONOR TRIUMPHANT : OR THE PEERES CHALLENGE, BY ARMES DEFENSIBLE AT TILT, TURNEY, AND BARRIERS. . . . Also, THE MONARCHES MEETING : OR THE KING OF DENMARKES WELCOME INTO ENGLAND. Tam Mercurio quam Marti.

1620. 12mo. A LINE OF LIFE. POINTING OUT THE IMMORTALITIE OF A VERTUOUS NAME. W. S. for N. Butter.

1629. 4to. THE LOVERS MELANCHOLY. Acted at the Private House in the Blacke Friers, and publikely at the Globe by the Kings Maiesties Seruants. . . . Printed for H. Seile, and are to be sold at the Tygershead in Saint Pauls Church-yard. [British Museum.]

1633. 4to. THE BROKEN HEART. A TRAGEDY. Acted by the King's Majesties Seruants at the Priuate House in the Black-Friers. Fide Honor. Printed by I. B. for Hugh Beeston, and are to be sold at his Shop, neere the Castle in Corne-hill. [Boston Public Library, British Museum.]

1633. 4to. LOUES SACRIFICE. A Tragedie Receiued Generally Well. Acted by the Queenes Majesties Seruants at the Phœnix in Drury-lane. . . . Printed by I. B. for Hugh Beeston, dwelling next the Castle in Cornhill. [British Museum.]

1633. 4to. 'TIS PITY SHEE'S A WHORE. Acted by the Queenes Maiesties Seruants, at the Phœnix in Drury-Lane. . . . Printed by Nicholas Okes for Richard Collins, and are to be sold at his shop in Pauls Church-yard, at the signe of the three Kings. [Boston Public Library, Library of the University of Illinois, British Museum.]

1634. 4to. THE CHRONICLE HISTORIE OF PERKIN WARBECK. A Strange Truth. Acted (some-times) by the Queenes Maiesties Servants at the Phœnix in Drurie Lane. Fide Honor. . . . Printed by T. P. for Hugh Beeston, and are to be sold at his shop, neere the Castle in Cornehill. [Boston Public Library, British Museum.]

1638. 4to. THE FANCIES, CHAST AND NOBLE. Presented by the Queenes Maiesties Servants, at the Phœnix in Drury-lane.

Fide Honor. . . . Printed by E. P. for Henry Seile, and are to be sold at his shop, at the Tygers Head in Fleet Street, over-against Saint Dunstons Church. [Boston Public Library, British Museum.]

1639. 4to. THE LADIES TRIALL. Acted by both their Majesties Servants at the private house in Drury Lane. Fide Honor. . . . Printed by E. G. for Henry Shephard, and are to be sold at his shop in Chancery-lane at the signe of the Bible, between Sarjants Inne and Fleet-street neere the Kings-head Taverne. [Harvard University Library, British Museum.]

1653. 4to. THE QUEEN: OR THE EXCELLENCY OF HER SEX. An Excellent old Play, Found out by a Person of Honour, and given to the Publisher, Alexander Goughe. . . . Printed by T. N. for Thomas Heath, in Russel Street neer the Piazza of Covent-Garden. [Boston Public Library, British Museum.]

1656. 4to. THE SUN'S DARLING. A Moral Masque: as it hath been often presented at Whitehall, by their Majesties Servants; and after at the Cock-pit in Drury Lane, with great Applause. Written

by { John Foard }
 { and } Gent. . . . Printed by J. Bell for Andrew
 { Tho. Decker } Penneycuicke. [British Museum.]

1657. 4to. THE SUN'S-DARLING: A Moral Masque: As it hath been often presented by their Majesties Servants; at the Cock-pit in Drury Lane, with great Applause. Written

by { John Foard }
 { and } Gent. . . . Printed by J. Bell, for Andrew
 { Tho. Decker } Penneycuicke. [British Museum.]

1658. 4to. THE WITCH OF EDMONTON. A known true Story. Composed into A Tragi-Comedy by divers well-esteemed Poets, William Rowley, Thomas Dekker, John Ford, &c. Acted by the Princes Servants, often at the Cock-Pit in Drury-Lane, once at Court, with Singular Applause. Never printed till now. . . . Printed by J. Cottrel, for Edward Blackmore, at the Angel in Paul's Church-yard.

C. SELECTIONS

This list includes reprints issued separately and with the works of other authors, translations, and extracts.

1714. 12mo. THE CHRONICLE HISTORY OF PERKIN WARBECK.
1744. 12mo. 'TIS PITY SHE'S A WHORE. A Select Collection of Old Plays, vol. 5.
1780. 8vo. 'TIS PITY SHE'S A WHORE. A Select Collection of Old Plays, vol. 8.
1808. SPECIMENS OF ENGLISH DRAMATIC POETS WHO LIVED ABOUT THE TIME OF SHAKSPEARE. [A new edition in two volumes with additional specimens was published in 1835. Contains excerpts from The Lover's Melancholy, The Lady's Trial, Love's Sacrifice, Perkin Warbeck, 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, The Broken Heart — the last followed by the famous ecstatic note, "The expression of this transcendent scene almost bears me in imagination to Calvary and the Cross."]
1819. THE LOVER'S MELANCHOLY, IV, iii. Campbell's Specimens of the British Poets, vol. III, pp. 233-240.
1819. FAME'S MEMORIAL. Edited by H. Haslewood. Kent: Press of Lee-Priory.
1830. THE BROKEN HEART. The Old English Drama, vol. 2.
1831. THE LOVER'S MELANCHOLY, THE BROKEN HEART, PERKIN WARBECK. New York: Harper's Family Library, Dramatic Series, no. 4, vol. 1.
1843. HONOUR TRIUMPHANT, AND A LINE OF LIFE. Shakespeare Society.
1848. DAS GEBROCHENE HERZ. Trauerspiel in fünf Akten . . . nach dem Versmasse des Originals übersetzt von M. Wiener. Mit einem Vorworte von L. Tieck. Berlin. Also with the title-page: John Ford's dramatische Werke, Erster Band.
1865. LE CŒUR BRISÉ. Contemporains de Shakespeare. John Webster et John Ford, traduits par Ernest Lafond. Paris.
1870. THE LADY'S TRIAL. The Works of the British Dramatists, edited by J. S. Keltie. Another edition in 1891. Edinburgh.
1888. THE LOVER'S MELANCHOLY, 'TIS PITY SHE'S A WHORE, THE BROKEN HEART, LOVE'S SACRIFICE, PERKIN WARBECK. Edited with an introduction and notes by Havelock Ellis. The Best Plays of the Old Dramatists (Mermaid Series).

1890. PERKIN WARBECK. Famous Elizabethan Plays. Edited by H. Macaulay Fitzgibbon. [Contains a brief notice of Ford.]

1895. THE BROKEN HEART. Edited with notes and introduction by Clinton Scollard. New York.

1895. ANNABELLA ['Tis Pity She's A Whore.] Drame en cinq actes . . . Traduit et adapté par M. Maeterlinck. Paris.

1896. PERKIN WARBECK. Edited by J. P. Pickburn and J. Le Gay Brereton.

1905. SPECIMENS OF THE ELIZABETHAN DRAMA. By W. H. Williams. Oxford. [Contains short excerpts from The Lover's Melancholy, The Broken Heart, Perkin Warbeck, The Lady's Trial; see pp. 397-416.]

1906. THE BROKEN HEART. A Play written by John Ford. Edited with a Preface, Notes and Glossary by Oliphant Smeaton.

1907. THE QUEEN: OR THE EXCELLENCY OF HER SEX. Nach der Quarto 1653 in Neudruck herausgegeben von W. Bang. Materialien zur Kunde des älteren Englischen Dramas, xiii. Louvain, Leipzig, London.

1911. THE BROKEN HEART. The Chief Elizabethan Dramatists, edited from the original quartos and folios with notes, biographies, and bibliographies, by W. A. Neilson. Boston.

II. WORKS BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL

1687. THE LIVES OF THE MOST FAMOUS ENGLISH POETS, William Winstanley [contains at page 114 a list of Ford's plays, with the remark that he was "very beneficial to the Red-Bull and Fortune Play-houses."]]

1691. AN ACCOUNT OF THE ENGLISH DRAMATICK POETS, Gerard Langbaine. Pp. 219-222. Oxford.

1811. 8vo. A LETTER TO J. P. KEMBLE, ESQ., INVOLVING STRICTURES ON A RECENT EDITION OF JOHN FORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS. Printed at Cambridge for Murray, London.

1811. 8vo. A LETTER TO WILLIAM GIFFORD, ESQ., ON THE LATE EDITION OF FORD'S PLAYS, CHIEFLY AS RELATING TO BEN JONSON. By Octavius Gilchrist, Esq.

1811. FORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS [Weber's edition], Quarterly Review, Dec., vol. VI; 462-487.

1812. WEBER'S EDITION OF FORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS, Monthly Review, March, 240-254, and April, 372-386, vol. LXVII.

1812. GILCHRIST'S LETTER TO GIFFORD; AND A LETTER TO KEMBLE, Monthly Review, April, vol. LXVII, 386-387.

1812. 8vo. A LETTER TO R. HEBER, ESQ., CONTAINING SOME OBSERVATIONS ON THE MERITS OF MR. WEBER'S LATE EDITION OF FORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS. [By J. Mitford.]

1821. THE PLAYS AND POEMS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE WITH THE CORRECTIONS AND ILLUSTRATIONS BY EDMOND MALONE, vol. 1, pp. 402-435.

1827. FORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS, Monthly Review, August, vol. V, 497-507.

1862. STUDIEN ÜBER DAS ENGLISCHE THEATER, Moritz Rapp, pp. 94-98. Tübingen.

1871. JOHN FORD, A. C. Swinburne, Fortnightly Review, July, vol. X, pp. 42-63. [Reprinted in Essays and Studies, 1875.]

1875. A HISTORY OF ENGLISH DRAMATIC LITERATURE, A. W. Ward. 2 vols., II, pp. 295-309.

1879. JOHN FORD, A. W. Ward, Encyclopædia Britannica.

1880. JOHN FORD EIN NACHAHMER SHAKESPEARE'S, Max Wolff. Heidelberg.

1881. CONTEMPORAINS ET SUCCESSEURS DE SHAKESPEARE, A. Mézières, pp. 330-339. Paris, 3rd edition. [First edition, 1863.]

1887. A HISTORY OF ELIZABETHAN LITERATURE, George Saintsbury. [Pp. 401-409 in edition of 1906.]

1888. METRISCHE UNTERSUCHUNGEN ZU JOHN FORD, Eduard Hannemann. Halle.

1889. JOHN FORD, A. H. Bullen, Dictionary of National Biography.

1891. THE OLD ENGLISH DRAMATISTS, J. R. Lowell. Boston.

1891. A BIOGRAPHICAL CHRONICLE OF THE ENGLISH DRAMA, F. G. Fleay. 2 vols., I, pp. 230-235.

1895. DAS VERHÄLTNIS VON FORDS PERKIN WARBECK ZU BACONS HENRY VII, Victor Gehler. Halle.

1897. QUELLEN-STUDIEN ZU DEN DRAMEN GEORGE CHAPMAN'S, PHILIP MASSINGER'S UND JOHN FORD'S, Emil Koepfel. Strassburg.

1903. A HISTORY OF ENGLISH POETRY, W. J. Courthope, vol. IV, pp. 369-385.

1906. FORD'S DEBT TO HIS PREDECESSORS AND CONTEMPORARIES; AND HIS CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE DECADENCE OF THE DRAMA, S. P. Sherman. [An ill-digested dissertation which reposes in manuscript in the Harvard University Library. Some of the conclusions were used in the introduction to W. Bang's edition of Ford; see above. A portion dealing with the source of The Broken Heart was published in the Publ. of the Mod. Lang. Assoc.; see below. Other suggestions regarding sources were mentioned by W. A. Neilson in the Cambridge History of English Literature; see below. F. F. Pierce put the author under obligation by utilizing some collections relating to the collaboration of Ford and Dekker in two articles published in Anglia; see below.]

1906. JOHN FORDE UND PARTHENIOS VON NIKAIA, W. Bang und H. de Vocht, Englische Studien, xxxvi, 392-393.

1908. A NEW PLAY BY JOHN FORD [The Queen, edited by W. Bang], S. P. Sherman, Modern Language Notes, xxviii, no. 8, pp. 245-249.

1908. ELIZABETHAN DRAMA, F. E. Schelling. 2 vols., II, pp. 327-336 and passim. Boston.

1908. TRAGEDY, A. H. Thorndike, pp. 226-229 and passim.

1909. STELLA AND THE BROKEN HEART, S. P. Sherman, Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, vol. xvii, no. 2, pp. 274-285.

1910. FORD AND SHIRLEY, W. A. Neilson, Cambridge History of English Literature, vol. VI, ch. VIII. [See also Index and Bibliography.] New York and Cambridge, England.

1912. THE COLLABORATION OF DEKKER AND FORD, F. F. Pierce, Anglia, xxxvi, pp. 141-168 and 289-312.

Glossary

- abiliment, ability. B. H. v. ii, 49.
- affied, betrothed. T. P. III, v, 9.
- anticke, clown. B. H. II, i, 61.
- Areopagite, a member of the court of Areopagus at Athens. B. H. I, i, 8.
- art, learning of the schools. T. P. I, i, 6.
- availeable, serviceable, important. B. H. I, ii, 44; II, ii, 25.
- board, jest. T. P. II, iv, 28.
- bobbe, cheat. T. P. III, i, 4.
- busse, kiss. T. P. III, v, 37.
- caroches, coaches. B. H. II, i, 129.
- cast-suite, a person who wears cast-off garments. T. P. I, ii, 11.
- codpiece-poynt, a lace for fastening a portion of the male attire. T. P. III, i, 15.
- collops, small pieces. B. H. II, i, 125.
- condition, character. T. P. II, ii, 94.
- confusion, perdition. T. P. II, iii, 54.
- cot-queane, shrew, hussy. T. P. I, ii, 13.
- couze, cousin; here means nephew. T. P. III, v, 32.
- cozen, used for various degrees of relationship; here, for niece. T. P. II, iii, 39.
- cull, embrace. B. H. II, i, 26.
- cunning, skill. T. P. II, i, 75.
- cunny-berry, rabbit-burrow. T. P. IV, iii, 165.
- dry beating, a sound thrashing. T. P. II, vi, 116.
- eare-wrig, flatterer, parasite. B. H. II, i, 13.
- fiddle faddle, trifle. B. H. I, iii, 110.
- firks, caprices. B. H. III, ii, 155.
- floates, flood or high tide. T. P. I, i, 65.
- fond, foolish, silly. T. P. I, i, 9.
- foyle, foil, dull background. T. P. II, ii, 30.
- franks, encloses as for fattening. B. H. III, ii, 198.
- gallymaufrey, jumbled mess. T. P. IV, iii, 13.

- geere, business, affair. T. P. 1, ii, 9.
- goverment, conduct. T. P. 1, i, 51.
- grammates, rudiments. B. H. 1, iii, 125.
- hugger mugger, secretly. T. P., III, i, 19.
- impostumes, abscesses. B. H. 11, iii, 135.
- index, the hand with pointing forefinger. B. H. v, i, 36.
- jayes, trumpery persons. B. H. 11, i, 136.
- jealous, suspicious. B. H. III, i, 3.
- kennel, gutter. T. P. 11, vi, 83.
- lik't, pleased. T. P. 11, vi, 107.
- luxury, lust, sensual indulgence. T. P. 1v, iii, 9.
- magnifico, magnate. T. P. 1, ii, 141.
- May-game, laughing-stock. T. P. 1, iv, 51.
- megrims, whims resulting from nervous headache. B. H. 111, ii, 155.
- mew'd, confined as in a cage for birds. T. P. v, i, 14.
- mewed, shed, moult. B. H. 11, i, 45.
- moil, mule. B. H. 1v, ii, 17.
- motions, puppet-shows. T. P. 11, iv, 53.
- nicenesse, standing on ceremony. B. H. 1, iii, 52.
- nuntio, papal ambassador. T. P. 11, iii, 31.
- owing, owning. T. P. 1, ii, 59.
- parmasent, Parmesan cheese. T. P. 1, iv, 67.
- partage, share. T. P. 1, ii, 161.
- pavin, a stately dance. T. P. 1, ii, 137.
- peevish, trivial. T. P. 1, i, 24.
- plurisie, repletion. T. P. 1v, iii, 8.
- points, laces. B. H. 1v, ii, 119.
- progress, a journey of state. B. H. v, ii, 40.
- provinciall, ? of Provence; see note. B. H. 1, ii, 66.
- quality, rank. T. P. 1, ii, 16.
- queane, low woman. T. P. 1v, iii, 25.
- rellishing, tasting, enjoying. B. H. 1v, i, 75.
- remark't, marked out. T. P. 11, v, 10.
- resolute, assured. B. H. v, i, 42.

- rest, resolution. T. P. iii, 75.
- rubs, knobs; the reference is here to the horns that grow on the forehead of the deceived husband. B. H. II, i, 28.
- sadnesse, earnest. T. P. I, iii, 84.
- schoole-points, academic questions. T. P. I, i, 2.
- seeled, with eyelids sewed together. B. H. II, ii, 3.
- sense, physical sensation. B. H. IV, ii, 18.
- shrewd, shrewish. T. P. II, ii, 119.
- single, single-minded. T. P. IV, i, 57.
- skonce, head. T. P. III, i, 3.
- springall, a youth. B. H. II, i, 12; youthful, B. H. III, ii, 144.
- states, dignitaries. T. P. v, ii, 21.
- tackling, weapon. T. P. I, ii, 1.
- tent, probe. B. H. IV, iv, 42.
- thrum, weave. B. H. I, ii, 134.
- turtle, dove. B. H. v, I, 14; T. P. IV, iv, 29.
- tutelage, guardianship. T. P. I, i, 53.
- tympany, swelling. B. H. II, i, 134.
- uds sa'me, God save me. T. P. I, IV, 60.
- un-raunged, ? unclassified. T. P. I, i, 45.
- unspleen'd, lacking a spleen and therefore of a naturally pacific disposition. T. P. I, ii, 62.
- wagtails, light women. B. H. II, i, 136.
- white-boy, favorite. T. P. I, iv, 86.
- winkes, shuts her eyes. T. P. III, ii, 23.

EASTWARD HOE

By JONSON, CHAPMAN and MARSTON and JONSON'S

THE ALCHEMIST

Edited by FELIX E. SCHELLING, Professor of English Literature in the University of Pennsylvania.

Illustration and Facsimiles

A frontispiece showing stage scene from The Alchemist, and reduced facsimiles of the title pages of a 1605 quarto of Eastward Hoe and the 1616 folio edition of The Alchemist.

The Texts

The text of Eastward Hoe is that of the first edition as exhibited in Q₂, with the variants of Q₁ and Q₃ carefully set forth in footnotes.

The text of The Alchemist is that of the first collective edition of Jonson's works, the folio of 1616, which received the author's careful revision. The variants of other folios and quartos are noted.

The Editor's Work

also includes a Life of Ben Jonson, 4 pages; an Introduction, 23 pages; Notes on Eastward Hoe, 20 pages; Notes on The Alchemist, 25 pages; Bibliography, 7 pages; Glossary, 10 pages.

Gilt embossed cover.

xxxii + 408 pages. 60 cents.

THE WHITE DEVIL
AND
THE DUCHESS OF MALFY
By JOHN WEBSTER

Edited by MARTIN W. SAMPSON, Professor of English in Indiana University.

Illustration and Facsimiles

Portrait of Richard Perkins, the actor ; and reduced facsimiles of the title-pages of the first quarto editions of The White Devil and of The Duchess of Malfy.

The Texts

The text of The White Devil is that of the first (1612) quarto, with variants noted.

The text of The Duchess of Malfy is that of the British Museum copy of the first (1623) quarto, with variants noted.

The Editor's Work

also includes a Life of John Webster, 4 pages ; an Introduction, 34 pages ; Notes on The White Devil, 22 pages ; Notes on The Duchess of Malfy, 17 pages ; Bibliography, 9 pages ; Glossary, 12 pages.

Gilt embossed cover.
xlv + 422 pages. 60 cents.

THE GOOD-NATUR'D MAN AND SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER

By OLIVER GOLDSMITH

Edited by AUSTIN DOBSON, LL.D. (Edinburgh).

Illustration and Facsimiles

A frontispiece showing stage scene from She Stoops to Conquer; and reduced facsimiles of the title-pages of the fifth octavo edition (1768) of The Good-Natur'd Man, and of the fifth octavo edition (1773) of She Stoops to Conquer.

The Texts

The text of The Good-Natur'd Man is that of the fifth octavo collated with that of the first, second, and third octavo editions, with variants noted. The text of She Stoops to Conquer is that of the fifth edition — the last published during Goldsmith's life — with variants noted. Appended are the epilogues and song.

The Editor's Work

also includes a Life of Oliver Goldsmith, 4 pages; an Introduction, 21 pages; Notes, 21 pages; Bibliography, 7 pages; Glossary, 2 pages.

Gilt embossed cover.

xl + 285 pages. 60 cents.

SOCIETY AND CASTE

By T. W. ROBERTSON

Edited by T. EDGAR PEMBERTON, author of "The Life and Writings of T. W. Robertson," "John Hare, Comedian," "The Kendalls," etc.

Frontispiece

Portrait of T. W. Robertson, after an etching by R. W. Macbeth.

The Texts

Society is printed from the English acting edition, which embodies the original manuscript now in the Shakespeare Memorial Library at Stratford-on-Avon.

Caste is also from the English acting edition of French, after the original manuscript now owned by Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft.

The Editor's Work

also includes a Life of Robertson, 4 pages; an Introduction, 27 pages; Notes, 18 pages; Bibliography, 2 pages.

Gilt embossed cover.

xxxvi + 300 pages. 60 cents.

A BLOT IN THE 'SCUTCHEON, COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY, A SOUL'S
TRAGEDY, AND IN A BALCONY

By ROBERT BROWNING

Edited by ARLO BATES, Professor of English Literature in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Illustration and Facsimile

A portrait of Browning in 1835, and reduced facsimile of the title-page of the first edition of A Blot in the 'Scutcheon.

The Texts

are those of the latest edition, 1888-94, which had the personal supervision of Robert Browning, with variants noted.

The Editor's Work

also includes a Life of Robert Browning, 3 pages; an Introduction, 28 pages; Notes, 22 pages; Bibliography, 4 pages; Glossary, 2 pages.

Gilt embossed cover.
xxxviii + 305 pages. 60 cents.

SELECT POEMS OF SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE

Edited by ANDREW J. GEORGE, Editor of "Select Poems of Wordsworth."

Portraits

Coleridge in 1795, from the original painting by Peter Vandyke ; and Wordsworth in 1797, after the portrait by Hancock.

The Text

includes ninety-eight poems, chronologically arranged, and representing the great body of Coleridge's best work. The date and place of the first publication of each poem is given when possible. The text is that showing Coleridge's latest revision. Important variations in the text are duly considered in the notes.

The Editor's Work

includes an Introduction, 28 pages ; a Life of Coleridge, 4 pages ; Notes, 112 pages ; Index to first lines, 4 pages.

Gilt embossed cover.

xlii + 410 pages. 60 cents.

H 147 74

Deacidified using the Bookkeeper process.
Neutralizing agent: Magnesium Oxide
Treatment Date: Feb. 2009

Preservation Technologies

A WORLD LEADER IN COLLECTIONS PRESERVATION

111 Thomson Park Drive
Cranberry Township, PA 16066
(724) 779-2111

APR. 74

N. MANCHESTER,
INDIANA

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 013 999 473 5 ●